

DUMAS'

Art Annual

An Illustrated Record

OF THE EXHIBITIONS OF THE WORLD

The illustrations of this Book have been printed by

GEORGES CHANLROT

10 Rue des Saints-Pères

From the engravings of

GUILLAUME FRÉLIS

225 Boulevard d'Enfer

DUMAS'
Art Annual

An Illustrated Record
OF THE EXHIBITIONS OF THE WORLD
1882

CONTAINING ABOUT 250 ORIGINAL DRAWINGS
REPRODUCED IN FAC-SIMILE

PREFACE

THE idea of publishing an Illustrated Catalogue of the Salon has proved felicitous. It dates from 1879. The ensuing year, Illustrated Catalogues were brought out in connection with the Fine Arts Exhibition at Berlin, and the Historical Exhibition of Belgian Art at Brussels. The New York Academy of Design and the International Exhibition at Budá-Pesth followed suit in 1881, and this year Vienna and Moscow have become identified with the movement. We have therefore convincing proofs of the warm appreciation evinced by the public for this class of work.

Every day Art is taking a more important place in our social system. The moment therefore appears opportune for publishing a Universal Illustrated Catalogue, embracing the annual Exhibitions of both the old and the new world.

Following the engravings will be found critical notices of all the great Exhibitions, signed by art critics of high repute.

PREFACE

Doubtless our Illustrated Annual of Fine Arts is far from being complete. The work was taken in hand since the month of September, at a time when artists of all countries are dispersed in every direction, consequently it was no easy task to carry out our programme to the letter. The Great Sales, Monuments, Art publications and Decorative works, together with productions under the head of the Drama and Music, which the year has called forth, have not received as much attention as we could have wished.

It was in carrying out this first attempt that we became aware of the inadequacy of a single volume to meet the requirements of all the subjects which had a right to be included in it. Consequently we have decided to publish two volumes during the year 1883, to appear respectively on the 1st June and the 1st December.

By these means we shall be able to fill up all blanks, and bring our efforts into closer relationship with the actualities of the hour.

Our Art Annual will thus assume the position of a complete Review of the Fine Arts, the want of which has hitherto left a vacant space in the library of every lover of Art.

GENERAL INDEX

DRAWINGS

ROYAL ACADEMY LONDON

	Pages		Page
BARNARD (F)	2	MORRIS (P R)	18
BOUGHTON (G H)	19	NORMAN (M ^{rs} C H)	4
BYRNE (E)	17	RFID (John R)	13
COLE (Vicat)	1	ROBINSON (Miss A L)	14
GOODALI (F)	9	SCHMALZ (H)	5
GREGORY (C)	10	STORES (A)	11
HENNESSY (W J)	3	STONE (Marcus)	12
HINDLEY (G C)	7	STOREY (G A)	15
LEADER (B W)	8	WATERLOW (E A)	6
MACBETH (R W)	16	YEAMES (W F)	1

GROSVEVOR GALLERY LONDON

ALMA TADEMA (M ^{rs})	20	GREGORY (E J)	21
BARTLETT (W H)	22	JOPLING (M ^{rs} L)	14
BOUGHTON (G H)	25	STAPLES (R P)	23
FISHER (Mark)	24

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS

DUNCAN (W)	27	HOPKINS (A)	29
GILBERT (S r John)	28	READ (S)	26
HAAG (Carl)	30

ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY EDINBURGH

HOLE (W B)	35	NOBLE (J C)	40
LFYDE (O T)	5	NOBLE (R)	36
MAC KAY (W D)	37	SCHILLDS (T W)	35
MURRAY (D)	34

GLASGOW INSTITUTE OF FINE ARTS

BLACK (A)	33	CARLAW (W)	31
-----------	----	------------	----

ROYAL HIBERNIAN ACADEMY, DUBLIN

	Pages		Pages
HAYES (E)	40	JOHNS (C)	39

AMERICAN WATER COLOUR SOCIETY

BECKWITH (J -C)	43	SHULTON (W -H)	52
DUNK (W M)	49	WOOD (T W)	44
FARRER (H)	51	QUARTLEY (A)	53
HOFMANN (T)	41

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN ARTISTS, N Y

BLUM (R)	50	LUNGFEN (F H)	48
----------	----	---------------	----

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN, N Y

BRIDGMAN (F A)	47	HOFMANN (T)	46
GIFFORD (R -S)	52

PENNSYLVANIA ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS

KIRKPATRICK (Frank)	42	45
---------------------	----	----

ART UNION OF LAUSANNE

BOGION (F)	60	ZUNO (Robert)	50
LEMAITRE (N)	61

ART UNION OF NEUCHÂTEL

ANKER (A)	54	JEANMAIRE (E)	55
BACHELIN (A)	56	MEURON (A de)	59
BURNAND (E)	62	REMY (Paul)	57
HUGUENIN LASSAUGUETTE	62	VUILLERMET (Ch)	50

ANTWERP EXHIBITION

ANETHAN (M ^{me} d)	63	VERSTRAETE (T)	63
VERHAERT (R)	64

DECORATIVE ART EXHIBITION, PARIS

BAUDRY (P)	68	69	FREMIET (E)	76
CARRIER BELLEUSE (L R)	66	75	GALLAND (P -V)	65
CAZIN (J C)	74		GÉROME (L)	82
CHABAL-DUSSURGEY	80		LEGRAND (E)	85
DEPLANCHÉ (E)	72		LECHEVALLIER - CHE -
FALGUIÈRE (A)	70		VIGNARD	81
			MERCIÉ (A)	79

CENTRAL UNION OF DECORATIVE ART, PARIS

	Pages		Pages
DELAHIRE (Collection)	86	MORICE (L)	73
DRYFUS (Collection G)	93	NITTIS (J DE)	67
PAIER PRINT (Histoire du)	93-96	NOEL (G)	77
LE BRETON (Collection)	89-94	PINEL (G)	84
MOBILIER NATIONAL	87-88 90	REGAMEY (F)	71
	91-92	SCHWIDT	65
		TRUFFAUT (G)	76-83

PARIS SALON

AGACHE (A)	105	JOURDAN (A)	109
ASTRUC (Z)	115	LA PENNE (P - P - A)	98
BÉROUD (L)	100	LECOINTE (A - J L)	121
BOTTÉE (L A)	118	LEMAIRE (L)	111
CHAPERON (E)	103	LEOFANTI (A)	117
CORNU (V)	120	MILLOCHAU (E J)	105
COT (P A)	97	MOUBUR (J O)	119
DAGNAN-BOUVERET (P - A - J)	104	NANUR (E)	120
DEPLANCHÉ (E)	114	PEYROL (F - A - H)	121
DELORT (C - E)	108	PUVIS DE CHAVANNES (P)	107
DURAND (Simon)	102	RIBOT (T A)	101
DURST (A)	110	ROCHEGROSSE (G)	97
FOSSÉ (A)	121	SAIN (E - A)	106
GALLARD LÉPINAY (E)	110	SIMMONS (E.)	112
GOSSIN (L)	120	STEUDER (B - A)	122
AMIN (P J)	111	TOURGUEFF (P N)	116
		WYLIE (N DE)	113

VIENNA INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF ARTS

BAUR (A)	134	KAULBACH (F - A)	147
BADITZ (O)	136	KELLER (F)	131
BERNATZIA (W)	140	L ALLEMAND (S)	152
BLAU (T)	124	LANCEFRETTO	130
BRUNNER (J)	138	LYBAERT (T)	151
BUCHF (J)	149	MAKART (H)	138
DAHL (Hans)	144	MASIC (N)	135-137
FELIX (E)	146	MELLERY (X)	126
FISCHER (L H)	127	MICHAEL (M)	125
FRIEDLANDER (F)	148	MORENO (C J)	129
GREIVE JEUNE (J C)	149	MORENO (M)	142
GROSZ (A J)	139	RUMPLER (F)	143
GUTH (H F)	143	SAINTIN (J E)	123
HANSEN (H - N)	133	TEMPLE (H)	141
KARGER (C)	156	VAGO (P)	132

AMES (W. F.), R. A. Le Prince Arthur et Hubert. — Prince Arthur and Hubert

BARNARD (F) Sidney Carton

HEAVENLY (W-J) En Fete Cahados

NORMAN (Mr's C-H) Paeots — Poppies

SCHWALZ (H) Voix! — Voices!

WATERLOW (E. A.) Le Lavage des Moutons dans le comté de Sussex — Sheep Washing East Sussex

HINDLEY (G C) Les Peripeties du veritable Imour — "The Comse of True Love"

LEADER (B-W) Ce Saur il sera clur -- It the Evenig there shall be Light

GOODALL (F) R A Memphis

GREGORY (C.). Épines.—Thorns.

STOKES (A) Après midi d'hiver à mi le sud de la France — 1 Winter Afternoon in the South of France

COLE (V cat) R A 46 Gdo

John P. Reddell

Rosses v (Miss A. L.) Uie M re store it ne t Flore t ne Mother and Cl H

Joyliver (Mrs I Rosa non te la blo de
 Fir Rosa o id

• SIOBHY (C-1) A I y Tille pense
Pc isie d'ughter

STONI (Mincus) A R A
H y en a toujours un autre

MACBETH (R W) L. Auberge du Bac — The Ferry Inn

BYRNE (E.). Membres de la commune. — Members of the Commons.

Morris

• Boucurov (G-II) A R A Un échange de compliments, Muden, Hollande
Muden, North Holland An exchange of Compliments •

ALMA-TADEMA (Mrs) L'Aiguille de la Grand mere — Granny's needle

GREGORY (E-J) Une Répétition — A Rehearsal

STATUES (R-P) Bonsour, fleurs! — Good-night to the flowers *

FISHER (MARK) Printemps -- Spring-time

BOLGHTON (G -11) A R A Promenade d'Automne au bord du Spey
An Autumnal Ramble by the Spey

READ (S) La porte sud de la Cathédrale de Münster
South Entrance to Cathedral, Münster

DUSCAN (W.A. Posthumus et Imogen. — Posthumus and Imogen.

GILBERT (SIR JOHN) R A La Tête de la Procession — The Head of the Procession

HOPAINS (A.). Tout le monde au cabestan! — "All hands to the capstan."

HAAG (CARL) Bedo un Mugharibe faisant ses dévotions
A Mugharibe Beda 1ee at Devotion

CARLAW (W.). Dechargeant le Poisson. — Larding the Fish.
(Storcharen, Écosse.)

LEYDE (O T) R S A Degringolade — Off and away

BLACK* (A.). Parmi les Bateaux de pêche — Among the Trawlers (Tarbert).

Holk (W. B.) A R S A Le Parlement du Prince Charles — Prince Charles's Parliament.

NOBLE (R) Ombre et Lumière -- Sunshine and Shade

M'KAY (W D) A R S A Pastorale eossaise — A Scottish Pastoral

JONES (C.). Soirée d'Automne en Wiltshire. — Autumn evening in Wiltshire.

HAVES (E) R H A Dordrecht sur le Maas — Dordrecht on the Maas

NOBLE (J C) ARSA Rouen

Hovenden (T) A N A C'était le bon vieux temps ! — Dem was good old times !

KIRKPATRICK (FRANK). Les Antiquaires. — The Antiquaries.

BECKWITH (J C) Carmen

WOOD (T. W.) O

Uncle Ned

KIRKPATRICK (FRANK) Paysage pres Tivoli — Near Tivoli

HOOVENDE (T) A N'A L'la e

BRIDGMAN (F 1) A N A La Fontaine de la Mosquée — The Mosque Fountain

Doux (W. M.) L'après-midi du Samedi — Seventh Day Afternoon

BAY (R) Laria t po le Lido — Going to the Lido

LARSEN (11) N A Auto me — Gone hath the Spring with all its flowers, and goe the Summer's pop up and shou

GIFORD (R S) N A l'alaise de Nonquitt — Nonquitt Cliff

SHELBOY (W H) Grand-pere montant la garde — Grandfather on guard

QUARTLEY (A) Le Vieux Cl'and — A Riverside Antique.

ANEX (A). Intérieur Suisse — Interior in Switzerland

JEANNAIRE (E) La Sortie de l'étable (Jouy Perrey) — Leaving the Stable

VUILLERMET (Ct.) Vallée de l'Orbe (Jura)
Orbe Valley

BACHELIN (A) La Générale Sovenir de l'occupation des frontières — Souvenir of the occupation of the frontiers, 1870

Rou. r (1) La Prairie — The Meadows

MEUNIER (A. DE) Un soir dans les Alpes — Evening in the Alps

ZUND (ROBERT) Forêt de chênes. — The oak forest

MELON (A DE) Utso r da s les Alpes — Even g t e lps

Lucy (Robert) Forest de chênes — The oak forest

Bocion (F). Le lac Lémán, vu de Saint-Saphorin, -- Lake Lemani, from Saint-Saphorin.

LEMAITRE (N.). Sur le Salève. -- On the Salève.

BURNAND (F) Glaneuses — Gleaners

HUGUENIN-LESALCETTE (F). Pâturage à la Tourne.
A Pasture at the Tourne

D'ANETHAN (M^{re}) L'Enfant malade — The sick child

VERSTRAETE (T) Dans la Bruyere — In the heath.

VERHAERT (R.) La Marchande de morue à Anvers — Woman selling fish at Antwerp.

GALLAND (P. V.) Étude — (study)

SCHMIDT Groupe de Martins Pêcheurs Peinture Barbot e
Group of King Fishers Painted Barbot e

CARRIFF-BELIEUSE (L R) Dessin à crayon blanc — A Drawing in White

NIRVIS (J DE) H G Les Courses d'Auteuil (Pastel)
Races at Auteuil (Bois de Boulogne)

BAUDRY (P.) H. G. Le Jugement de Paris — The Judgment of Paris

L'ALBUM (A) H. G. Projet pour le couronnement de l'Arc de Triomphe
Sketch for the summit of the Arc de Triomphe

RIGAMY (F.) La grande Chasseuse — The great Huntress •

DELAFLANCHE (L.) H C Le Travail — Work

MORICE (L.) H G Rosa Mystica

Caz v (J C) H G La Pezate — The Retreat

(ARRIFR-BELIFUSE (L. R.) Dessin au crayon blanc — A Drawing in White

TRUSTAUT (G.). La Prairie. — The Field.

NOËL (6.) Roquebrun le (1) totif a un pan teau de salences décoratives) — Roquebrun (motive for a panel in decorative suite)

C. Truquet

MERCIE (A) B C Épée d'honneur offerte au general de Cissej
Sword of honour presented to General de Cissej

in the same way
Chabot

LECHEVALLIER CIEVIGNARD Tornatura modele d'une tapisserie des Gobelins
Tornatura model of a Gobelins tapestry

GÉROME (L) H C Gladiateur romain — Roman Gladiator •

TRUFFAUT (E. L.). Le Potager (fragment).
From the Kitchen garden.

PINEL (G) Le I eveil de la Nature (plafond)
The awakening of Nature

115 (E) Divers motifs pour la Cour Louis XIV à l'Hotel de Different motifs for the Louis XIV court, at the Paris Hotel de

COLLECTION DELAHERCHE Cadre bois sculpté avec partie dorée (fin du x^e siècle)
Carved wood gilt Frame (end of xth century)

MOBILIER NATIONAL Vase forme coupe ronde en marbre orné de bronzes ciseles et d'ores executes par Gouthiere — Round cup-shaped Vase in marble, ornamented with carved, gilt, bronze subjects by Gouthiere

MOBILIER NATIONAL. Candélabre en bronze cisele et dore sur fond d'email bleu exécuté par Thomire (1785) pour être offert par la Ville de Paris à Lafayette — Carved gilt bronze Candelabra with blue enamel, made by Thomire in 1785 for presentation to Lafayette by the town of Paris

LECTION LE BRETON (G) Statuette bois sculpté Pleureuse
 (Fin du xiv^e siècle)
 Carved wooden statuette The weeper (End xivth cent)

MOBILIER NATIONAL. Horloge astronomique en bronze doré et ciselé inventée par Passemont, exécutée par Dauthiot, bronze de Caffieri
An astronomical clock carved in gilt bronze invented by Passemont manufactured by Dauthiot, Bronze by Caffieri

MOBILIER NATIONAL Candélabre Louis XVI, en bronze ciselé et doré.
Carved and gilt bronze Candelabra Louis XVI

MOBILIER NAT ONAI Cabinet serre bijoux de Marie-Antoinette bois d'acajou orné de bronzes ciselés et dorés par F. Schvertfeger — A jewel cabinet of Marie Antoinette in mahogany with carved gilt bronze ornaments by Schvertfeger

COLLECTION DREYFUS, (G.). Un buste de femme en bois sculpté (xv^e siècle).
Woman's bust in carved wood (xvth century).

COLLECTION LE BRETON Tête en bois sculpté

COLLECTION L. LE BRETON Groupe en bois sculpté
(commencement du xv^e siècle)

ARTS DÉCORATIFS — Histoire du Papier peint — Historique et ses applications

COT (P. A.). H. G. Mireille.

LA PENE (P. P. 11) Supplice de Regulus — The execution of Regulus

ROCHEGROSSE (G) Vitellius trainé dans les rues de Rome par la populace
Vitellius dragged through Rome by the mob

BEROUD (L.) Le Salon carré au Musée du Louvre
The « Salon carré » at the Louvre

RISOR (T A) H C Mcillard — An old man

CHAPFON (I.) Waterloo, épisode de la ferme de Hougomont — Waterloo, the farm of Hougomont

DAGNAN BOUVÉRET (P. A. J.) Bénédiction des je nes Epoux a va t le nar age co t n e de Fri c le Co le Bless ne of th e betroth ed before mar iage

ANTIQUE (13). Baigneuse.
The Bather

ANTIQUE (14). Les Parques. — The Fates

SAINT (E A) H C L: B udictio: pater: elle anant le ma iage
The paternal blessing before the wedding

PEVIE IN CHIVARRA (P.) H. G. Dour Pava. — The Happy Land.

DELORT (C E) H C Prise de la flotte hollandaise par les hussards de la République (Fragment) — Capture of the Dutch fleet by the hussars of the Republic (Fragment)

LE FAIRE (L.) Ex Le Petit Val enroué d'Etrelat — The little Val

JAMIN (P. J.) Le neveu de la fruitière enfance du général Hoche
The fruiterer's nephew, the childhood of General Hoche

S 11045 (E) Etude a Concarneau — Study at Concarneau

WY 1F (M DE) Passe minut — After mid: glt

DELAFLANCHE (E) H C L'Aurore — Dawn

ASTRLC (Z) Ex Le Marcland de Masq es — The Mask Dealer

TOURGUENEFF (P N) L'Appel au bac The call to the Ferryman

LEOFANTI (A) Pro Patria mori

BOTTÉE (L. A.). Saint-Sebastien — Saint Sebastian

MONDUR (J O) Paysanne d'Auvergne
A peasant of Auvergne

GOSSIN (L.) Amo (1411)

COURTY (V.) Rouget le Lisle

NAUDIN (E.) Cintorelli

LECOQTE (A J I) Sedaine

PEYROL (F A H) Étude

Fossé (A) La Vague — The Wave

STELER (B A) Ballade a la Lune — A Song to the Moon

SAINTIN (J. E.). H. G. — Leda.

BLAU (T) Fleurs des champs — Flowers of the fields

MICHAEL (M) Idylle — Idyl

MELLERY (X) Une Vente publique au xvi^e siècle
A public Sale during the xvth century

FISCHER (L. H.) Forêt de palmiers pres Memphis
Forest of palm trees near Memphis

MAKART (H) Portra t du comte E Zichy — Portra t of Count Zichy

MORENO (C. J.) Le Prince Charles de Viane (Navarre) a l'étude
Prince Charles of Viana studying

L'INCREPTE / rh ss de la Sa it Ma c — The bits of Saint Mark

KELLER (F.). Hero et Léandre.

VA 001) Iep e ker 1 s — Tle e at Step

HANSEN (H N) An Cemetery — At the Cemetery

BAHR (A) Le Mue au Sufere — The Infatigable

Masić (N.). Gardeurs d'oies en Esclavonie. — Geese-tending in Esclavonia.

Mexico (N.) Tlaxcala — Working in the Garden

BRUNNER (J) Après le débordement. — After the inundation.

Grosz (A J) Cl o g g a p e s l e a — Ch o k k a t e a r l e u c e .

TABLE (II). Assemblée d'Électeurs. — Meeting of Electors.

MOORE (M) Repetition générale — General Relicary

Fig. 11. Pechora Tentative Isotope — Isotope during a storm

Dual (Wave) Attraction ϵ_{mune} — I emine Attraction

Resurn (F) Les Chats — The Cats

FÉLIX (E) Leda

KAULBACH (F.A.) Joueuse de Luth — A Lute-Player

Bucire (J) Pysa d i Pasterhal
Countryman of Pasterhal

Gravel (J C) V l fu Selregersto c i
View of the Selregersto c i

KARGER (C) Composition for the dedica e — A dedication composition

LABAERT (T.). Sainte Elisabeth de Hongrie. — Saint Elizabeth of Hungary.

PLATE 100 (S) L'entrée des Chasseurs de Dauphine et de Bourgogne à la Victoire
 Entry of Dauphin's Chasseurs in the Bourgogne of Victoria

• KAYSER (E) Moisson précoce — Pénalité Rétr 15

1 EMATIF (F H C La Nymphe Echo — The nymph Echo

LEACH (J) H C I 1851

TATTEGRAIN (F) Ex Un Gilocheur — A Wooden-shoe-maker

ADAM (E.), H.C. La Romance — The Romance.

MESGRIGNY (1) DEJ Ex Laitous sur l'J: tre -- Wash houses on the river Laidre

Ванна и д. Эк. Гроз. Т. 1873 — Stormy Weather

ARCOS (S) Le Choix d'une Guitare — The Choice of a Guit

MENZEL (A) Figure pour la « Procession »
Figure for "The Procession"

COURTNEY (G) L'Homme blessé — The wounded Man

COURTNEY (G) La Femme et le perroquet — Woman with a Parrot

HATONY (1st) H G Fude -- Study

BALDWIN P. H. C. 1111 - Study

BRANTOT (A H) H C La Compassion — Compassion

SCHOMMER (F) Ex La Resurrección de Lazare — The Resurrection of Lazarus

PERNOT (T - I) Le Tasse du Belvedere — Tasso

PNTA (H L M) Matt all as ref sa t de sacrfier aux idoles
 Matt all as refus g to sacrfce to idols

FERRARY (D VI) St. Sébastien percé de fleches
St. Sebastian

RÉCRUE (E.). Le Départ du Conscrit. — Departure of a Recruit.

MAKOVSKI (V) Cie, le Juge de pa v — At the Judge of peace's office

JOURNÉES () La Bénédiction de la fiancée — The Blessing of the betrothed

ROGUE EN 1871 (A-P) L'attaque d'un monitor russe par un bateau à mine russe
L'exploit de Lorient sur Skrydloff

MIKOLSKI (C) Les Martyrs Bulgares
The Bulgarian Martyrs

PRIBLOFF (S) Maria Mnišek et son père
Maria Mnišek and her father

KLDR (N) U e Fo te da t i to s de bo lea x
Load in a ot of tree trees

MIASSOLEDOFF (G) U e Process on pendant t ie secl cresse
A Processio d r ng the dro ght

VASNETZOFF (V) Une jeune Folle
A Mad young girl

KLEVOR (K) Une Vue dans l'île de Narghen — View in the island of Narghen

LANCERAY (E) Cosaques du Don (forageurs) — Cossacks, foragers of the Don

MAXIMOFF (B) Us pauvre Souper — A poor Supper

VASS LIEF (T) Le Degel — Tle Tla

KOSCHELEFF (N) Le Colporteur de village — Tle village Ha her

МАКОВСКИЙ (С) Le Carnaval à Saint-Petersbourg — The Carnival at Saint Petersburg 18

RÉPINE (E) Les Haleurs du Volga — The Trackers of the Volga

BOYKIN (M.). Un Sectaire russe.
A Russian Sectary.

POUKIREFF (B.). Un Couple mal assorti.
An ill-assorted Couple.

Вид из окоп (Н. М.) Да с е Cell k — It a Cell

Тепе синагога (И.) У а B. B. ar t — I B. B. ar

NOVOSKOLTZFF (A Saint Serge be issen le g a id du Di i t i Do isko St Serge blessing the g a n d d ke D n tri Do isko)

ANTOKOLSKI (N) Jest le Terrible — He is the Terrible

VERESCHAGLINE (B V) Le Déserte — l'abandon

VERESCHAGLINE (B V) Les Mangeurs d'opium — Opium Laters

SALO ATAINF (L 1) Chate rs de Fete — Singers for the Fete

PEROFF (B Q) U i F terre nent de village — A village B rial

N A z \ G) Desm p r le ro na Le l r e Serebre o d C Tolst(n)
 D av g fo lle oy l The Prince Sereb e

SCHWARTZ (V. G.) Dessin pour le 101. Le Prince Serbreio d'Uve J. 1810
 Drawing for the novel The Prince Serbreio

A REVIEW
OF THE ART
EXHIBITIONS
OF 1882.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.

THE one hundred and fourteenth exhibition at Burlington House, London—which contained 1,700 works by living artists, and was open from the 1st of May until the end of July—although successful beyond precedent from a popular and financial point of view, produced no painting or work in sculpture that will make it specially memorable. But if the members of the Academy, of whom there are forty, and the thirty-one “associates,” hors concours (who have together the monopoly of the best positions on the line), have been content for the most part to repeat former successes rather than achieve distinction by the production of any great picture, the remaining exhibitors, “outsiders,” were never stronger than in the present year. This fact was admitted by the President, Sir Frederick Leighton, in his speech at the banquet at the opening of the Exhibition. “I think it is impossible,” he said, “to look round these walls without being conscious of a great vitality in the work of the year. Opinions may vary as to the direction of the energies of our schools, but this is certain, that among the youths who throng the ranks of art (and with them is our chief concern) a breath of wholesome life is keenly felt, as of those who look into the future with hopeful and believing eye. The President's words are worth recording as indicating the sympathy and recognition which young painters receive at his hands, and in practice his example is equally important, for, in spite of his numerous duties and the claims upon his time, the paintings by the President were the most thorough and painstaking of any exhibited this year. The heroic figure of Phryne standing on the steps of the temple of Eleusis, in glow of setting sun, and the two figures walking together on a terrace by the sea, called Wedded, were pictures which in quality of colour, grace of line, and care in composition, were not excelled in the Exhibition. These classic figures, in which composition and colour had been elaborately studied, may be taken as representative of the spirit in which many of our young painters are now working, and in which they look for encouragement from their new President. Many pictures—such as Dolce far niente, by C. E. PERUGINI, which was hung near SIR FREDERICK LEIGHTON'S Wedded in the first gallery—point to the influence of the master amongst "outsiders," but we must first speak of work of Members and Associates. Visitors to the Paris Universal Exhibition in 1878 who remember the pictures in the English Section by J. E. MILLAIS—The North West Passage (lately engraved in Modern Artists), A Yeoman of the Guard, Chill October, his great landscape, also a small early picture by him called The Gambler's Wife—will regret that in 1882 his principal works were portraits. It is true that portraiture has risen during the last twenty years to the rank it held in England in the time of Gainsborough and Sir Joshua Reynolds, and that the best talent of the country is concentrated on this branch of art. In the forefront was Millais, with such representative works as Sir Henry Thompson, the eminent surgeon, the child figures of Dorothy Thorpe and the Princess Marie, daughter of H. R. H. the Duchess of Edinburgh, and his Eminence Cardinal Newman. Here we see the painter at his best, seizing the characteristics of his sitters with vivid force, and painting with a certainty and decision of touch in which he is unequalled. Next to him (perhaps before him from an intellectual point of view) is G. F. Watts, who had little in the Exhibition of 1882, but whose collected works exhibited last winter at the Grosvenor Gallery will be remembered by many. It has been said that the difference between these two great painters of portraits consists in this, that whilst Mr. Millais shows the outward characteristics of a man to perfection, Mr Watts portrays his inner life certainly the collection of pictures and portraits by Watts, exhibited technical and intellectual qualities of the highest order. Next on the list of eminent names we have to record that Mr Alma Tadema contributed one portrait only to the Academy, that Mr E J Poynter (who ranks next to the President in classic knowledge and in the practice of decorative art) sent one small picture and part of a design for the decoration of St Paul's Cathedral, a work upon which he is engaged with Sir Frederick Leighton. The claims and attractions of portraiture have almost taken from the ranks of genre and figure painters Mr W Q Orchardson, Mr Frank Holl and Mr Hubert Herkomer, who with Mr Alma Tadema and Mr Ouseley have done much to raise English portraiture to its present high position, their powerful and realistic works were prominent features of the Exhibition, a prominence due partly, it must be owned, to the large scale, often larger than life, in which many were painted. Mr FAITH, who has been occupied during the past year on a picture of society, The Private View of the Royal Academy, giving portraits of many well known people (not yet exhibited) sent but one small portrait picture, whilst Mr Faed, whose pictures of Scotch peasant life have attracted crowds by their homely pathos exhibited his skill in two works of no great importance, and Mr FILDES, a young Associate, who has moved us to tears in years past with such works as The Casual Ward and The Widower, reserves his powers for 1883. Mr Calderon sent no picture, and Mr G D LESLIE single figures only—No 531, A Daughter of Charity, being an excellent example of dexterity in colour.

To turn now to the successes of the Members and Associates of the Royal Academy, from a popular rather than from a highly critical standpoint. The principal work at the head of the large room (a position accorded to members of the Academy in succession, and not indicating special merit) was Memphis, by FREDERICK GOODALL, a picture remarkable for the beauty and solemnity of the landscape, studied with unusual earnestness by a painter whose name has been most frequently associated with Oriental figures illustrative of Bible history. Amongst the principal figure subjects were Prince Arthur, by W F YEAMES, Lord Say before Jack Cade, H S MARKS, The Palmer, and The Duke of Monmouth, by JOHN PETTIE, A Love Story, FRANK DICKEE, The Meeting of St Francis and St Dominic, E ARMITAGE, Why tarry the Wheels of his Chariot? E. LOFIC, The Death of Suard, VAL PRINSEP, The Letter Writer, J. B. BURGESS, A Fight for the Standard, SIR JOHN GILBERT, The Sale of the Boat, P. R. MORRIS, A Dutch Seaside Resort, G. H. BOLGHTON, Pensive Daughter, G. A. STOREY, A Jacobite Proclamation, A. C. GOW, and Il y en a toujours un autre, MARCUS STONE. The animal paintings, always popular, were contributed by R. Ansdell and T. Sidney Cooper. Mr. H. W. B. Davis, Peter Graham, and J. MacWhirter sent mountain landscapes and cattle in brilliant sunshine and mist. Mr. Hook's landscapes, representing with vigorous sameness the sea coast, and the lives of the fisher inhabitants of the west of England, were amongst the most popular pictures exhibited, attaining success regardless very often of the most ordinary rules of composition and colour. It is hard to say whether the swarthy faces of his fisher girls, or the "winds that shine along the sea," had most attraction, but the popularity of his work is unquestioned. Two prominent landscape painters are VICAT COLE and JOHN BRETT, Abingdon, by the former, and The Grey of the Morning, by the latter, being representative pictures. It would not be easy to point out two works more dissimilar in method and yet more thoroughly characteristic of the English school of landscape painting as it is accepted in England in 1882. Nearly thirty years ago Mr. Brett painted the Val d'Aosta for Mr. Ruskin, spending three months on a small study of a mountain side; he now paints at least thirty pictures a year, and Mr. Vicat Cole, who is at work on a series of views of the Thames from its source to the sea, is one of the most industrious of living painters. Mr. J. MacWhirter, Mr. Oakes, Mr. Hodgson, and Mr. Herkomer should be mentioned with the landscape painters, and Mr. Crofts as a painter of battle scenes, but there is no question that the most vigorous and skilful of the battle painters are to be found amongst the "outsiders," to whom we must now turn.

Of the artists whose paintings crowd the Academy walls but who have no privileges, some are as familiar to us as the works of the Members. In the Evening there shall be Light, by B. W. LEADER, was a fine landscape by a regular exhibitor, and Sunlight and Shade by MARK FISHER, the work of a painter who has attracted much attention in France and America. In the sixth gallery (a new room opened this year) the principal positions were occupied by painters ("outsiders") who seemed to have been purposely ranged to-^{gether}, representing much of the strength and ambition of the younger school of artists—W C Symons, S E Waller, Henry Moore, Laslett J. Pott, J Farquharson, R C Woodville, Heywood Hardy, J D Linton, Seymour Lucas, and Walter Stacey.

Amongst pictures scattered through the galleries which have attracted attention by their merits, or by the happy accident of a well chosen subject, may be mentioned —A Venetian Boat Thresher, HILDA MONTALBA, The Ferry Inn, R. W MACBETH, The Course of True Love, G C HINDLEY, Our River (Thames), W L WYLLIE, En fite Cal idos, W J HENNESSY, A Funeral Service in the Highlands, JAMES GUTHRIE, Rest, E B S MONTEFIORE, A Winter Afternoon, A STOKES, Voices, HERBERT SCHMALZ, Dreamers, ALBERT MOORE, Homeless and Homeless birds, J R REID, Thorns, C GREGORY, Fioreat Etoma ' ELIZABETH BUTLER, Sidney Carton, FREDERICK BARNARD, Hurt, TOM LLOYD, Sheep washing, E A WATERLOW, Music on the Water, HAMILTON MACALLUM, The Wounded Stag (a fine landscape), C L JOHNSON, A Day in the Country, F W LAWSON, Trouble, ALICE HAVERS, Fridai (monks at supper), W D SADLER, A Royal Musician, W D WYFIELD, The Last Days of Sir Philip Sidney, R. HILLINGFORD, Out of the Hurly burly, E H FAHRE, Vicenza, J O'CONNOR, River at Sonning, A W HUNT, Messengers coming to Job (Royal Academy prize in 1881), S M FISHER, The Skipper and his Crew, ARTHUR HUGHES, Waiting for the Homeward Bound, COLIN HUNTER, and Members of the Commons, by E B de SATUR.

The Foreign Exhibitors included the names of Munkacsy, Andreotti, Schloesser, Weber, Fantin, Cassien Scholderer, Van Haanen, Ralli Jan Van Beers, Telemaco Signorini, and Francesco Vinca. In the Water Colour Gallery were 237 drawings, and in another room 233 architectural drawings, miniatures, etchings, and engravings. The Sculpture Gallery contained 154 works, principally portraits. There was nothing of much originality in design or excellence to mark the year from its predecessors, although, for the first time in the history of the Academy, a fitting gallery had been set apart for sculpture. When we have mentioned the beautiful marble group of Artemus, by HAMO THORNYCROFT, and the bronze statue of Teslar, by the same young sculptor (purchased by the Council of the Royal Academy), we have indicated

two of the most complete and successful { works in the highest department of the sculptors art

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY

THE sixth annual exhibition in New Bond Street, London, contained 389 works by living artists, including paintings, water colours, and sculpture. Amongst the exhibitors were Sir F. Leighton, Millais Watts, Holman Hunt and other well known names, but the principal interest in this exhibition was centred in the works of less known artists, whom Sir Coutts Lindsay, the founder of the gallery, had invited to contribute. First in order of the catalogue we should notice the work of a young artist, Loading Corn, West of Ireland, W. H. BARTLETT, and above it the robust, determined figure of a field girl, life size, by R. B. BROWNING, a young painter whose work, faulty in drawing resembles (at a distance) that of M. Bastien Lepage. Next in order were two very small, delicately painted figure subjects, by HERBERT SCHMIDT and W. E. F. BRITTEN—Che sara sara, by the latter, exhibiting much poetic feeling. Near the foregoing was a small landscape by Mark Fisher, a good example of paysage. In prominent position on the walls were—Good night to the Flowers, R. P. STAPLES, An Autumnal Ramble by the Spey, G. H. BOUGHTON, A Rehearsal, by E. J. GREGORY, A Florentine Mother and Child, Miss ROBINSON, and others, principally by young painters, many of which would have escaped notice on the walls of the Academy.

In the large west gallery the place of honour was accorded to a portrait picture of two children, by J. E. MILLAIS, and in the east gallery Mr. WATTS's fine portrait of Cardinal Manning had a principal place. Mr. ALMA-TADEMA sent five pictures, including portraits of Hans Richter and Ludwig Barnay as Marc Antony, one of the celebrated Meiningen company of tragedians. One of his smaller works, Early Affections, represented a young mother and child in a Roman garden full of red poppies—a brilliant effect, a masterpiece of colouring on a small scale (15 in. by 9 in.). In the same gallery the figure of a child, by HOLMAN HUNT, called Miss Flamborough (a portrait of his own daughter), was one of the curiosities of the Exhibition—a realistic portrait, as powerful in colouring as Quentin Matsys—a blaze of red, blue, orange, and purple, which will not soon be forgotten. In the east gallery, a contrast in its low tone of colour and refinement of treatment, was Mr BURNE JONES'S Tree of Forgiveness. This painter, whose works in the Grosvenor Gallery, in 1877, were the strength of that year's exhibition (and who has many followers), sent ten pictures this year, of which The Tree of Forgiveness was the most important. The two nearly nude figures of Phyllis and Demophoon filled a large upright canvas, the anatomy of the limbs and the painting of white almond blossoms and other accessories being rendered with the utmost care and knowledge, the effect, as a whole, sad and constrained, in spite of good drawing and beautiful passages of colour—a work the like of which can be seen only at the Grosvenor Gallery.

Other names to be mentioned are—J North Keeley Halswelle, Cecil Lawson, and A W Hunt, in landscape, also E J Gregory, R. W Macbeth, Albert Moore, G Clausen, G H Boughton, T Armstrong, J M Whistler, Clara Montalba, and Mrs Alma Tadema.

The Grosvenor Gallery was opened in 1877, to give special advantages to young artists for the exhibition of their works, and is successfully carrying out the programme year by year. A young landscape painter of great promise, lately dead, Cecil Lawson (whose last works were in the present exhibition), owed his wide reputation to the position afforded him in this gallery. In sculpture the works of young artists, Mr Alfred Gilbert, Mr Waldo Story, Miss H S Montalba, and La Source, by Professor LEGROS, attracted special notice.

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS

THE ninety seventh exhibition of this Society, which opened last April under the Presidency of Sir John Gilbert, R A, contained 274 works of which five are sketched in the present volume. In the Paris Exhibition of 1878, the gallery containing English water colours will be remembered for its excellence, a success largely due to the influence of the "Society of Painters in Water Colours," and to the "Institute of Painters in Water Colours." The even quality of work, and the transparent beauty of colour attained in water colours by many of its experts, especially in landscape, render the exhibitions of these Societies the most interesting of the year in London, at the same time there is little to call for special notice where the members are almost uniformly successful, and where many repeat the same effects year after year Mr Herkimer, in a late address to art students, attributed much of a painter's success, both in oils and water colours, to his previous training as a draughtsman on wood, and it is noteworthy that four of the painters whose works are here reproduced—Sir John Gilbert, Carl Haag, S Reid, and A Hopkins—have devoted much of their time to book and newspaper illustration

PROVINCIAL EXHIBITIONS

Of the numerous provincial exhibitions which are held annually in England, the two in which most local talent is to be found are the ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY in EDINBURGH, and the INSTITUTE OF FINE ARTS, in GLASGOW. Important exhibitions are held annually at Dublin, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham &c., but many of the best pictures exhibited have been seen in London or elsewhere, and there is less local interest attaching to them. In the EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY, in Edinburgh, which contained more than 1,000 works, the places of honour in the first room were accorded to Mr CAMERON'S Funeral, Mr PETTIE'S portrait of John Ballantyne, and to landscapes by W Bettie Brown, James Kinnear, James Archer, &c. In the great room were Mr LOCKHART'S Ciel and the Fife Moorish Kings, and McWHIRTER'S Valley by the Sea also works by W McTaggart, Walter Paton, A Perigal, Alexander Fraser, George Reid, W F Vallance, W D M'Kay, W B Hole, R Noble, and G Aikman. Other names to mention are R Herdman, T. Graham, D Farquharson, David Murray, and John Smart. The numerous Scotch landscapes and the portraits—notably those by George Reid and the late Sir Daniel Macnee—were prominent features of the Exhibition.

The GLASGOW INSTITUTE OF THE FINE ARTS contained 1,000 works, and included the names of Holman Hunt, Burne-Jones, Millais, Prinsep, McWhirter, and other London artists. Of the pictures by local artists we may mention landscapes by W Carlaw, Andrew Black, David Murray, W D M'Kay, J Aitken, J D Bell, J Farquharson, G Aikman, G W Johnstone, and A Perigal. There were also good paintings by J R Reid, J W Waterhouse, H Sykes, Walter Huthcheson, A S Boyd, John Smart, W Rat-tray, D McLaurin, Hugh Allan, David Carr, H M Paget, H W. Mesdag, C E Halle, James Guthrie, Charles Green, and

E M Osborne Amongst the water colours in Glasgow were two powerful heads—Grandfather's Pits—by HUBERT HERKOMER, and works by P W Allan, P Buchanan, W. Carlaw E. Hayes, J Aumonier, and Henry Moore

The fifty third exhibition of the ROYAL HIBERNIAN ACADEMY OF ARTS at Dublin contained 666 paintings and works in sculpture In the large room were exhibited Relics of the Past, by C W NICHOLS, The Last Voyage of Henry Hudson, by JOHN COLLIER, Spring, by MARK FISHER, The Terrors of Oxford, by J AUMONIER, and sea pieces by E HAYES Other notable pictures were by E J Brennan, W Magrath, Frank Dillon, Louis Ebner, C Goan, B Colles Watkins, and Charles Jones

Thus we have passed in review some of the principal works exhibited in England, Scotland, and Ireland in 1882, omitting, for want of space, the mention of several exhibitions which have claimed the attention of connoisseurs The productiveness of our artists has been great during the past year (rendering it impossible to mention more than a selection of names), and with the more systematic training of students in the Academy and Government schools the future for 1883 is unusually hopeful

END OF THE YEAR

ART IN AMERICA IN 1882.

MY DEAR DUMAS,—

You ask me to throw on paper some impressions of the art movement in America during the year 1882. This is the converse of the catechism in which we examine every European who sets foot in our drawing rooms. "Pray, sir, what is your opinion of our country?" And, the alarmed pilgrim, tortured with new impressions, palsied with hand shaking, pulverised with railway travelling, sees a circle of smiling and jealous natives waiting for him to put into a pretty epigram his ideas about the White House, the Rocky Mountains, the gold mines, the red skins, the tolets of Newport, and the buffaloes. The experienced traveller takes his audacity by the horns and murmurs sugarily. You seem to me the heroes of Ossian cross hatched with the warriors of Homer, and dry pointed with the men of Plutarch. All the company pats its stomach and admits the impeachment. Now you know what to say when you come to New York, where we hope to see you soon. But you have taken, in advance, the best possible revenge. There is nothing so droll as to capture an American, and pin him to the wall with the simple question, "Well, what do you think of yourselves?" He perspires under your Vehm gericht. For he is not the irresponsible tourist, with the privileges of a guest. He has the conscience of his knowledge, and

Jones in the colors of Gainsborough. But the most important of the pictures sent from London was Mr. WHISTLER's Portrait of his mother. In a country so frankly devoted to Continental art as the United States, this contribution from another and more ethereal school was an event in the evolution of technic. For myself, brought up in a hard class, which teaches that the painted object must be so real that the eye can not only sink into its cavities but pass around behind it—that the plastic motive, in fact, must have the effect of a reality, separately placed in a given space of visible air—this figure flat and clinging to its back ground like a drapery, and reminding me of some of the early glass paintings in grisaille, was somewhat naïve in its unreality. It was almost a monochrome, being a harmony in tranquil grays. The lady sat in profile, life size, against a wall decorated with a framed engraving, and looking towards a crape curtain or portière, whose crudely painted Japanese embroideries and flourishes positively seemed to jingle, they were so much more sharp and cutting than the soft, still, placid figure. This picture has been engraved in mezzotint, and nourishes the ecstasy of the mystics, who call it, I know not why, a Velasquez. Its peculiar and fascinating quality, which I fully grant, is that it seems to be modelled, not by reflected light, but by light passing through it. Elsewhere there was the Munich recent, equally pronounced, in the contributions of Mr. KIRKPATRICK, a young pupil of Diez, Makart, or Siemiradski in their Munich period, might have signed these canvases, luscious and gummy with their painting of treacle, in one, a gorgeous Venetian palace showed the painter Tintoretto exhibiting to a crowd of senators his latest decoration for the Scuola of San Rocco, in another, two Amateurs of Bric-à-brac sat beneath a balcony of hammered brass, perusing like so many Don Quixotes the romance of old Gubbio vases and Faenza monsters (I send you the illustration), in a third, Near Tirol, a Roman Imperia reclined among the ruins of Adrian's garden.

Among all the contributions, the works of the students in Paris, with their distinctness, their love of gray effects, their firmness of design, were the most sure of themselves and made the most dramatic impression, but, conscious of their difficulties overcome in the commencements of a severe school, they were perhaps more pupil like and declamatory than any of the others. In this class were PEARCE's Beheading of the Baptist, and Moss's Christ among the Doctors, life size groups, BRIDGMAN's Game of Chess in a Cano Cafe, and BOGGS Unloading the Crabbing Boat, the most successful keyboard of vibrating grays yet struck by this determined admirer of Luigi Lotti. DANA's moonlight Marine was rewarded by the Academy with purchase and a medal. BIRGE HARRISON sent his Return from the First Communion, a hard but luminous study of muslin draperies in hot sunshine, when he afterwards showed this picture, together with the Acmler, in the Paris Salon of 1882, the French government bought the larger of the two pictures. CHARLES DUBOIS showed the best landscape in the exhibition, The Sane at Meudon. But you will ask me if there was nothing in all this concert of the voices of Babel to betray the cry of the soil, the dialect of the Americans. I would point out in answer the work of Professor EAKINS, who is at the head of the art classes in the Academy. This well drilled pupil of the old Gerome atelier, one of the best anatomists and hardest students I find anywhere, contributed some Fishermen mending their Nets,* in which the figures, softly modelled in hazy sunshine without photographic acuity, reminded me of Bonnat in his best Roman period. The odd backward view of a line of boatmen's trousers, patched out of oilcloth and old sails, designed with all the energy and movement of the camera lucida, really had more expression than Titian's row of bishops' backs in the Louvre. Unluckily, a meaningless tree and neglected landscape contradicted the effect of this series of American apostles, but the little group of stooping legs and primitive pantaloons, taken by itself, and relieved against the cloud of nets shaken out by the wind against the sky, seemed to me of more precious quality than is usual in American art, and to unite the successes of the academic and the impressionist painters. —A hungry crowd of American hunting-dogs, fed by a groom, did great credit to Mr POORE, and soon found a purchaser, in portrait, two heads by Mr J. S. SARGENT, the painter of the Jaleo Dance, arrived late, and looked as if they might be improved by taking more time and arriving later, but Mrs WHITMAN, a Boston lady, in her portrait group of the Cadwallader Children, revived, by her broad, sweeping style, with golden shadows, my recollections of the romantic, lyrical, sun-bathed figures of Deveria and Couture. And this is all the space I can give to a representative exhibition collected from the corners of the old world and the new, at such a cost of fatigue and annoyance as will perhaps forbid its being ever imitated in the same scale and completeness. The Academy at Philadelphia is the only institution whose directors have the leisure and impartiality to thus summon the scattered American pupils from their easels planted all over the globe. These directors are a kind of club, a circle of wealthy art patrons who maintain the Academy from motives of benevolence. The other Academies are local and maintained by the artists of their respective cities. Government patronage, you know, is entirely wanting to Art in America. The institution in Philadelphia, founded in 1805 and immediately possessing a gallery, and thus older than the National Gallery in London by nineteen years, has become a sort of Museum, consecrated to the keeping of spectral pictures by such Philadelphia worthies as Benjamin West and C. R. Leslie. Its edifice is the largest of its kind in the country, and its schools, under Professor Eakins, may boast of facilities for modelling, model painting, and anatomical dissection, superior to any that can be pointed out in Europe, and habitually the subject of commendation from such stragglers from European ateliers as happen to see them.

There is but one Society of Water color Painters in America, a society some eight or nine years of age. In February it opened its annual Exhibition in New York, borrowing as usual the rooms of the Academy in that city, which owns a very elegant building erected in 1865, in a style of white and colored marbles imitating the Palace of the Doges. There was exactly one contribution which formed a "star" in this collection, The Sisters, by the Philadelphia painter Abbey. And, by the way, having begun this article with Philadelphia, I wish I could send you illustrations of the works lent to the various exhibitions of the year by Philadelphia artists, such as Sargent, Abbey, Knight, and the brothers Alexander and Birge Harrison, but in each case there has been a preventing motive. Mr. Abbey, for instance, always promises his minutest drawing to Harper the publisher. He is an artist who has been intimately connected with the recent improvements in American wood engraving, his sketches made for an artistic society called the Tile Club having developed the talent of the best engravers employed by Scribner and Harper in succession. At present, no number of "Harper's Magazine" is thought complete without a frontispiece by Abbey. His water color of The Sisters, completely English in style, represented a low broad window, with its small panes, and its row of geranium pots, in focus, while in front were the vague pale silhouettes of two village maidens in dresses of 1820, executing a song and piano accompaniment." So far 's the design went, this motive had all the directness which should be the property of water-color; executed in bistre, it would have seemed perfect, and would have been much more strictly aquarelle. The colours seemed to have been added as an afterthought, and the work had the perplexity of a design, colored. But the purity of the types, the pastoral and idyllic feeling, and the decision of touch, made this a picture of great distinction, its price was marked at two thousand dollars, and this figure, for a cartoon perhaps twenty four inches across, did not prevent its finding a purchaser on the first day. Another picture by Mr Abbey, a single figure called Autumn, was equally distinguished and striking as a design, equally untechnical and forced as aquarelle. In both, the profound, exhaustive, discerning study of human character, as character, took the place of study of human figures as plastic objects, and showed how completely Mr Abbey has allowed himself to be influenced by English art. Other pictures had more of the flavour of the soil. Mr HOPKINSON SMITH sent a large view of the Brooklyn Bridge, the longest suspension bridge yet constructed, painted in a bold and dashing style, and a graphic, spirited sketch of The Old London Coffee house at Quebec, with several other subjects. Among hundreds of contributions, I cannot select any more American and full of "dialect" than those of which I send you the sketches for publication. Dem was Good Old Times, for instance, is a perfect type of the Pennsylvanian negro, who remembers slavery simply as a delightful and patriarchal legend of his youth. Under his thatch of snow white wool, consoled by his pipe and his banjo, he enjoys in retrospect the dances and the opossum hunts of that irresponsible golden age. The painter is THOMAS HOVEN DEN, whose excellent Brittany subjects you will remember at various Salons. Seventh-day afternoon, by Mr DUNK, shows life among the country Quakers, at an hour when the week's work is done, and the mother and daughter, a good twelve hours in advance of Sunday, enjoy a kind of secular Sabbath, enlivened by books and knitting work. Mr QUARTLEY, a rare colorist, who however is almost a novice in water color, sent A Riverside Antique, an old barge roofed in, like the boatmen's cabins at Etretat. I am not afraid to draw two perilous comparisons, in trying to define Mr Quartley to you, you must imagine the river views of the Belgian, Clays, animated with the superb colors of the port scenes of Villon. Mr FARRERS autumnal lake, Gone hath the Spring, was a large, melancholy, despairing picture, which always drew before it crowds of perfectly happy spectators, delighted to bathe in its poetic hypochondria. In a very different vein was the head of Carmen, washed in with audacious grace by Mr BECKWITH, a pupil of M. Carolus Duran.

The Academy of Design, at New York, opened its regular Spring exhibition in March, with a contribution of about eight hundred paintings. This association, with artists for President and officers, was incorporated a few months earlier than the Academy at Philadelphia, began its annual exhibitions in 1825, and built an adequate gallery, as above stated, in 1865. Entirely committed for support to the hands of the painters, who were often embarrassed and struggling for a living in a new country, it has had such ups and downs as only Balzac could analyze. At present it sees itself prosperous, but with some remarkable figures among its Academicians, elected in the genial old times because they could tell good stories at the annual dinner. Its yearly displays are the principal exchange or bourse for American art, and provincial painters from a thousand leagues away send in their terrible canvases in cheerful faith, chilled only by the knowledge that the places on the line opposite the eye are reserved by the merry old Academicians for their own subjects. The galleries are perforated with a suitable number of lofty doors, and it is over these doors that the intelligent visitor always looks for the best pictures. The President, Mr Huntington, is a portrait painter encumbered with commands, and a most cultured and distinguished gentleman. Do not expect to hear of mythological ceiling pieces, nudities, pompous historical paintings, or indeed of gallery pictures. Remember that the government never orders or buys a painting, that Protestant churches are not decorated, that the town halls and seats of legislation are not frescoed in America. Nothing strays into the exhibitions but small easel pictures, such as may hope for a ready sale, and the honorable army of portraits. In the strictest sense of the term, it is art unsuffocated by State patronage. Let the Europeans who deprecate this patronage, behold and admire. I am not going to inflict on you the dissection of eight hundred pictures and more. A very few samples will suffice. Suspense (watching the battle of Bunker Hill) showed the natives of Boston, at the beginning of the American Revolution, clustered on their house tops, and contemplating that defeat which was to teach them victory, it was by Mr BLASHFIELD, who has been known by a Commodus in the Arena, and several archæological subjects very studiously and happily treated. Ma-art Singing his Requiem was a group, well composed and balanced, showing the maestro dying to music among an orchestra of his pupils, like a king who expires in state before his ministers. It was by Mr SHIELDS, a pupil of Munkácsy. Elaine, a most attractive theme from the legends of the Round Table, showed the dead maiden hearing her love letter to Launcelot, and surrounded by King Arthur's court, it was the first attempt at poetical subjects by its author, Mr HOVENDEN, best known for his Breton heroes of the Vendean war. Mr J G BROWN, whose scenes of American familiar life are always disputed for by a crowd of eager buyers, sent Tuning up,—the figure of an old village fiddler who has been the choragus of a thousand rustic dances and weddings. Uncle Ned and I, a white child in the arms of a faithful slave, was contributed by Mr T. W. WOOD, another favourite genre painter of New York. I am happy to name these two artists as not being the pupils of any Continental professor—the fact is at present a distinction in America! Mr BRIDGMAN, always welcome, sent from his Paris studio one of his Algerian studies, A House at Biskra. One of the pathetic scenes of Puritan life was contributed by Mr VOLK, who has made a specialty of his miseries of Pilgrim maidens to the deep New England snow—surely the best symbol of the difficult change from a sheltered country to a savage one, in this case the girl kneels upon a frozen grave, with the legend, Just one year ago to-day. An exquisite landscape was the Nonquitt Cliff of Mr GIFFORD, an artist who can paint the still serenity of air in some uncontaminated corner by the sea-side more persuasively, more purely, than any American painter, the open sunshine, the free breeze, seem to play in his pencil. Mr IVYES, in a broader octave, with a rich splendor of style that renders him a kind of Delacroix of landscape, often makes the eye widen with astonishment at the impromptu of his color-contrasts, his bold harmonies, his opulence of expression, this year he showed a comparatively quiet theme, Under the Greenwood, not unlike some of the Fontainebleau subjects by Diaz. Mr T. MORAN, who has ransacked the most distant parts of America for novelties, showed the mud fortifications of the village-building Indians of New Mexico, a part of our country where a Yankee governor gravely presides over an estimable population of Spanish thieves and snake worshipping red skins.

On the 6th of April, at New York, opened the exhibition of the "Society of American Artists," a young association supposed to be more "in the movement" than the Academy. The exhibition, by means of re-hanging, was made to display a large number of works in a limited space. Here, if anywhere, one expects to see works that show the place of America in art. The first thing that struck the visitor was that there were positively no works requiring "a long breath." The sincerity of the first impression, often very justly rendered, was all that could be credited to these sketchy and impromptu canvases, but at least each comprised a problem, and that not a problem of a literary, or narrative, or anecdotic sort, but a true painter's problem, an experimental harmony of colors, or a rendering of air, or a decorative novelty in composition. Mr FULLER, a Boston artist, is one who may be pointed out as fully of the soil, and the inventor of a style. By a strange vaporous treatment he contrives to enclose his Gipsy gurls or his young New England witches in the whole atmosphere of their Gipsy or wizard life, so that we see their past and future, and involuntarily set them in the full environment of Legend. This picture here had the oddly misunderstood title of Lordle. EAKINS contributed a life size Crucifixion, studied with fatal minuteness from a living suspended model, the artistic motive was to represent the full heat of the Eastern sun glaring on a naked body. Naturalism has seldom been so coolly applied to a clerical subject. DUVENICK, whose flesh painting, a little in the style of Menzel, has excited much admiration in Munich, was represented by two female figures, full of interest in the problems of portrait art. CHASE was represented by one of his feats of legerdemain in magical brushwork. Chase, whose portrait of Duvenick received an honorable mention in the Paris Salon of 1881, constitutes with that gentleman the mainstay of "the Munich idea" in American art, they have strongly tinged the young Society in question with this doctrine. Let them import into the painting of the United States some of the qualities of Menzel, of Leibl, of Lenbach, and there will be little complaint made of their propaganda. In opposition to this theory, and in the very bosom of this Society typical of advanced ideas, are artists who live upon the tradition and study of French art. Mr LUNGREN, for instance, while strongly American, obviously remembers Degas, De Nittis, and Cazin. He contributed a charming scene of a city park in the snow, with figures looking up at the electric light, whose rays wove a lace of tree-shadows over the whitened ground BLASH FIELD with an Autumn and VOLK with The Captives, MILLET'S portrait of the tragedian Barrett, WEIR with the Flore, THAYER with a Lady and Horse, EATON with a Portrait or two, showed the live sap of growing, creative art PALMER, BUNCE and BLUM presented Venetian scenes, Palmer was realistic, and Bunce recalled Turner, in these tributes to the Adriatic, while Blum, with a few true and sensitive touches, gave us the real unreality of water, and the true Venetian sense of living in a dream I have sent you the sketch of his Going off to the Lido

An unusual enterprise was undertaken, in April, in Philadelphia This was the Exhibition of Belgian Art, undertaken by the Consul-General of that country This officer, who has the privilege of selecting his residence, preferred to live in the first, rather than in the present, capital of the United States, and determined to gratify the city of his adoption with a painting festival furnished from his own nationality To obviate the high duties on imported pictures in America, the Academy of Art was constituted a bonded warehouse, or succursale of the Custom house, and the pictures paid no duty unless they were sold The enormous historical canvases in which Belgian art is so prolific flowed into the port of Philadelphia like an invincible armada As many of your readers, my dear Dumas, will possess your Belgian Catalogue of 1880, I will simply indicate the following subjects from the sketches in that Catalogue, as forming illustrations of the subjects shown at Philadelphia MEUNIER, La Coulée de l'Acier (36), MARKELBACH, Le Tuteur (58), DENDUYTS, Lever de la Lune (66), STRUYS, Deshonorée (102), ROBERT, Charles Quint (112), STALLAERT, Dernier Combat de Gladiateurs (127), GUFFENS, La Joyeuse Entrée (146), Carpentier, Les Réfugiés (150). ALFRED STEVENS sent an enchanting picture, four feet high, it showed The Widow, in gloriously painted black, visited by a white dove in a grove of trees HERMANSS Mask Ball in the Royal Theatre at Brussels, a thin but ably brushed wilderness of vermillion and madder lake, was bought by a club in Philadelphia The exhibition earned four hundred thousand francs, but it was a "bourgeois" success rather than an artistic success

On the 23rd of October the New York Academy again opened its doors, for a supplementary autumnal exhibition Among the pictures were QUARTLEY'S Thames at Gravesend, BLASHFIELD'S Rebecca, SARTAIN'S Old Orchard, HUNTINGTON'S Doctor Wash

burn, DANA'S Brittany Beach, and BRIDGMAN'S Planting the Colza and At the Mosque Fountain. Of the latter, an entirely new picture finished expressly for this exhibition, and including a truly living and spirited study of a black horse, I am able to send you a sketch by the artist. Nearly eight hundred works composed this exhibition.

About the same time, in Philadelphia, occurred the regular annual exhibition of the Academy, 125 paintings were sent thither by the single city of New York, being the works of such artists as Blashfield, Beckwith, Sartain, and Bolton Jones. But no part of the display attracted such attention as the contribution of about forty pictures from Americans living in Paris, including such striking canvases as BRIDGMAN'S Lady of Roumania, and the remarkable caravan subjects of Mr Weeks, in which he seemed to imprison the infinity and the melancholy of the Sahara.

To conclude, and to show you, my dear Dumas, how unfortunately true it is that American art is nourished from the milk bottle of Europe, I will mention the principal picture-sales, in which the sensational canvases were nearly always French. A sale of some importance occurred at New York on February 28th. The American Minister to Paris, Mr Morton, disposed of his whole collection, to which was added a part of the gallery of Mr. Hoe, inventor of a well known printing press. Mr Morton was the owner of REGNAULT'S Automedon and DACNAN'S Manon Lescaut, the former brought $5,900, and went to St. Louis, the latter brought $990, and returned to France. J. LEWIS BROWN'S Yorktown sold for $280, KNAUS'S Thief at a Fair for $2,250, and CHURCH'S Tropical Scenery for $3,175. One hundred and fifty seven pictures sold for 50,478 dollars.

On March 16th, at Boston, was sold the collection of Mr Adams, creator of the Adams Express, that magical parcels conveyance company which transports gold-dust through mountains and tribes of hostile savages. Tissot's picture of two ladies looking at a Chinese ship brought $1,200. One hundred and fourteen paintings and statues returned the sum of about 56,860 dollars.

John Wolfe, a well known New York hanker and collector, sold his entire gallery on April 5th. BONNAT'S Fellah woman and Baby brought $6,000, CABANEL'S Birth of Venus brought $5,300. PILOTY'S Anne Boleyn brought $3,500, CARL BECKER'S Fugger the Banker brought $3,900, MARCHAL'S study for the

Penelope brought $625 BOUGEREAU'S best picture, Satyrs and Nymphs, brought $10,000, and became the decoration of a fashionable dram shop. Ninety five pictures reached the sum of 131,945 dollars

A hundred subjects I would like to talk to you about, but I know that the penalty of diffuseness is that you send away your reader to a livelier chapter. So adieu, exhibitions in Boston and Baltimore, Chicago, St. Louis, and Cincinnati. Adieu, pretty little temple just built by the Art Club in Boston, and inaugurated in February. Adieu, exhibitions of black and white, of fans, of etchings, of wood engravings. I have told nothing, out of the world of things to be mentioned, but at least I have been less voluminous than Littré!

EDWARD STRAHAN.

FRANCE.

THE SALON OF 1882.

TWENTY good canvases, showing original power, when mingled with 10 000 commonplace or even worthless subjects, suffice to give importance to a Salon, whereas 1,696 pieces—the number of those exhibited at the Royal Academy this year—could not rescue it from complete obscurity were it impossible to point to a single example of superior art in the collection. Let us then congratulate ourselves that the Salon of 1882 contains this precious though modest number of paintings and pieces of sculpture which is alone sufficient to constitute an artistic year.

In the first rank among these chosen works is the Père Jacques by M. BASTIEN LEPAGE—a painting the superiority of which is all apparent. This young painter has been made the subject of such extraordinary praise by his friends, as well as by Panurge's excellent flock, the public, that we run great risk of displeasing many people by laying down this simple truth — 'M Bastien Lepage has made considerable progress during the last two years, and Père Jacques, if not a masterpiece, is incontestably the artist's chef d'œuvre up to the present date. It rarely happens that his Salon pictures do not draw from me most severe expressions of opinion. We exact a great deal from a man who we know can do better things. We acknowledge the infinite service he has rendered by holding aloof from convention and routine, we have the liveliest appreciation of the original cast of his talent, and, in a certain measure, of that persistent resolution and obstinate self-will which characterize his efforts. Nevertheless, five and twenty years devoted to the passionate study of art have not succeeded in curing us of our prejudice in favour of the finished picture, that is to say, the work that shows a proportional amount of completion in all its essential parts. This is what M. Bastien-Lepage has not yet shown us. He has allowed his distances—his partial flatterers say from want of care, we say from want of experience—to overspread each other, to advance and recede contrary to all perspective, and to become confounded in opposition to the most elementary sense of the picturesque.

"Above all things," said Prault, "let us carefully cultivate our defects. I am not aware that M. Bastien-Lepage has ever heard of this saying of the romantic old sculptor, but as he has not altogether got rid of his defects, while, on the other hand, they are no longer absolutely disagreeable, we may believe that he has very cleverly cultivated them. With a clearly defined purpose he concentrates all the picturesque effect of this simple, yet noble work, upon the bust of the old man. The head, so admirable in its modern realism, its severe truth, its precise modelling, its firmness and unequalled science, seems to stand out of the canvas. Everything else is sacrificed to this striking effect. The landscape, the leafless trees that shoot aloft in the background, the thick brushwood, the newly-cut faggot—showing the salmon coloured wood where the billhook has been at work—the legs of the good man, the child, too, in her little blue cotton smock, are all carried out in a harmonious, discreet, yet uncertain light, without a contour or detail wholly defined, and as a vague and dim accompaniment to the chief interest—the head of Pere Jacques. Looked at from the point of view of just what it is intended to be—the portrait of a woodman, and not a picture—the work is of the first order.

Let us ask no more of any one than what he can give. Inasmuch as our French school, with the exception of M. Gustave Moreau and M. Paul Baudry, has lost the taste, and with the taste the feeling for heroic composition, let us think ourselves fortunate in being able to note the growth, even in this mediocre direction, of the robust and searching talent of a young man who, in the legitimate interpretation of the most humble aspects of social life, eschews all affectation and pre-emptive emptiness, together with the sordid industrialism, of the tinsel painters in vogue. It is, indeed, a healthy art that is so tenderly in love with nature, and to this we are indebted for the most impressive work in the Salon of 1882.

If the large decorative frieze prepared for the Amiens Museum, wherein M. PUVIS DE CHAVANNES has represented Young Picards exercising with the Lance, had been to us an unexpected revelation of new talent, we might perhaps have given it precedence over M. Bastien-Lepage's Père Jacques but the work was already known to us. With his Ludus pro Patria, M. Puvis de Chavannes likewise exhibits a decorative panel intended for M. L. Bonnat's residence viz Doux pays—a "sweet country" in very truth, in which the idyllic and bucolic life might be led in perfect contentment among these young women and frolicking children, while contemplating the infinite blue of the sky and that blue Hellenic sea dotted with white sails. Thus we are borne away on the wings of dreams, far from the cruel life of the town, to which we must nevertheless return, in order that we may be reminded that thought, however lofty and noble, is not all that is necessary to a work of art. It is not our intention here to make a subject of reproach to the artist for his habitually abstracted views in the matter of colour and modelling. But when an artist carries his prejudice against all that appears inferior to him to such a length, one may be permitted to express a regret that he is not equally rigorous in his choice of forms. These are often heavy, massive and thick-necked in the case of men and odd in the case of children. The qualities which predominate in M. Puvis de Chavannes' talent would allow us easily to forget certain weaknesses were he alone in question. But, unfortunately, he is at the head of a school, although his art is nothing but a beautiful eccentricity of art.

His art is as irregular as is that of M. Bonnat, which is made up of convention, artifice, and falseness, of trickery and old devices carried out with a clumsy instrument, an art devoid of the least charm, and the outcome of an intelligence neither high nor deep, but with all this there is, in the circumscribed and unimpressible brain of the Pyrenean painter, such energy, such will power, such a capacity for concentrated effort that in spite of the horribly suffocating and vinous atmosphere of the cellar, that light which seems to penetrate through an air hole to his models, and that plasterer's work which is the distinguishing throw a gleam of superior light in the room where it is placed—the same in which M. Bastien Lepage's Père Jacques is to be found. Nothing could be better than this chance companionship for showing the vast and legitimate variety that exists in those methods of interpretation whose elements nature has bestowed upon original artists. M. Bastien Lepage has a passion for reality. M. Baudry understands reality only by virtue of its value as a means to an end, or as an alphabet of types. It is to him a dictionary, whose words he employs with the instinct of a poet in harmony with his lyrical conceptions. And how exquisite a conception is that figure of Truth! For us it is a happy circumstance that M. Baudry has nothing of the sceptical humour of Fontenelle, and that he has opened the hand that held a truth so precious. Truth does not grow old, and thus it is that the painter has been able to clothe his conception with the eternal youth of the Immortals. Only humanity can but with difficulty support the radiance of her glorious nakedness, and this probably explains the presence here of the little spirit who offers her so lovingly with both hands the veils necessary for her sojourn among men. Looking at the pure grace of this beautiful and poetic composition, at the suppleness, the richness, the freedom, and all the marvellous resources of the delightful colouring, recalls the sonnets, so full of penetrating emotion and intense poetry, which the illustrious poet and painter of England, and father of the pre-Raphaelite school, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, bequeathed us.

Our Roman school is dying, it is, in fact, already dead. With the exception of a few survivors, professors rather than painters, no one regrets the loss. The State is obviously growing indifferent in the matter. The movement of mind in France is no longer in the direction of those forms of high art whose worship the Villa Médicis had the pretension to perpetuate—a pretension so little justified. But I sincerely believe that our "Romans" have themselves done more to divert all sympathy from their work than the realistic and naturalistic tastes of the period. Under the monarchy the sovereign took delight in surrounding himself with the "Grands corps de l'état," hence the Fourth Class of the Institute was for a long while supported, encouraged, and protected in the belief that the Crown received part of its lustre. At length it was perceived that the exchange was one-sided, and to this fact is to be ascribed the celebrated attempt to reform the École des Beaux Arts that caused such commotion in 1863, an honest attempt at first, but doomed to miscarry by pusillanimous concessions to the academic mind. The School now succumbs to official indifference and that of the select public of amateurs. Thus with a few exceptions the old pupils of the School of Rome have renounced their pitiful "high art," which no one cares anything more about, to become simple portrait painters—artists not without a certain talent, although it be of an insipid sort, showing no personal insight into nature, nor sense of arrangement and little originality in composition. Their Prix de Rome is equivalent to a patent for portraiture which secures to them an easy income of £4,000 a year. In the interest of their families, I am delighted that it does so, for it is reasonable enough that a manufacturer of painted canvas should make as much money as a manufacturer of silk, but I doubt if the Louvres of the future will be able to enrich the collected greatness of past ages with many examples of their productions.

All that we may expect from this clever yet empty art is that it will respond to the laudable sentiments of fathers, husbands, and children. But it is a satisfaction that is felt only behind the scenes, and consequently does not come within the jurisdiction of the critic. There are painters, however, of this school—Messrs Cabanel, Bouguereau, and Hébert, for instance, elders among the order—who bravely uphold the neglected standard on the ruins of their tradition. Younger painters of the brotherhood struggle, too, and courageously. All honour to the valour that strives for a failing cause—for the traditions of "high art!" Behold M. LAYRAND, with an Inès de Castro that would have overjoyed the Ambigu in the palmy days of historic drama, and M. BESNARD, still more tiresome, with his Remorse and a vast allegorical composition, Abundance encouraging Work, a patch work performance recalling M. Puvis de Chavannes and M. Luc Olivier Merson! These latter "Romans" have certainly lost the faith of their elders, and—witness Messrs Layrand and Besnard—try to coax success that turns its back on them, by the elaborate mise en scène of intentional eccentricity.

M. LECOMTE DU NOUY pleases me better. No doubt he is a century behind his time, and his triptych, Ilmer, is no translation after the manner of Lecomte de Lisle. The blind poet leaning on his lyre, with the sleeping child on his knees, among the ruins of Troy, an Iliad on his right, and on his left an Odyssey, draped à la Penelope and guarded by a dog of Eubeus, are all revelations of school routine, but carried out with an energetic obstinate conviction that to me is not displeasing. The only fault of all this is that it comes too late. In 1802 thus Homer would have enraptured the idolatrous admirers of Girodet Trioson, and Firmin Didot would have confided in the painter an important share in the collaboration of the celebrated illustrated edition of Greek classics side by side with Gérard, Girodet, Ingres, Percier, &c. I may add that M. Lecomte du Nouy would have most worthily performed his part.

Among these victims of this so called "classical" logomachy there is one whose case is especially interesting—M. LEHOUX. This young man, premier laureate of the Prix du Salon, has been for eight years crushed by the excessive weight of his first success. He gave evidence of unbounded pretensions to style, and showed us but a wretched collection of pompous pieces, disconnected in meaning, overcharged with efforts that failed to express themselves, inflated without being powerful, containing, moreover monstrous muscular effects that would have been exaggerated even in their right place, the Forêt du Trône, and which are quite inconceivable in relation to his subjects. We must therefore admit that, according to the saying of the Latins—Fata tuam inveniunt—Destiny ever finds its road, for this turgid art, so thoroughly antipathetic to every heart that loves sincerity and simplicity, moves us this year in a form that shows no improvement in the direction of sincerity and truth. I refer to the picture called Le Suicide.

The intention is horrible. By means of grappling irons and strength of arms, four men in a boat, which one of them guides by aid of a long gaff, are drawing out of the stagnant depth of a reedy pond, the surface of which is covered with water lilies, the corpse of an old man—some village Lear—grown green by the length of time it has been in the water. One of the men seizes it by the belt, another by the arm, a third applies a sort of harpoon to it. The heavy body comes up erect and falls over a putrid mass, as it is disengaged from its humble winding sheet of dead vegetation. Now what saves this picture from being absolutely repulsive, and places it in the category of tragic horrors, is, in the first place, the vast dimensions of the canvas, showing that the work is not a simple "fait divers," and in the second place, the motive of the artist to convey an impression of magnitude and grandeur into these human forms, which, by their attitudes, height, and even colouring almost realise the poetry of heroic expression. Had M. Lehoux treated his subject in that spirit of realistic observation adopted by M. Gervex in painting his Goalkeepers of the Vilette Docks, Le Suicide would have been utterly and filthily repulsive.

On the whole, the fishermen whom M. HÉCTOR LEROUX—unfaithful this year to his chaste vestals—exhibits in their graceful postures on the picturesque banks of the Tiber, whose waters roll in yellow muddiness, as they have done from time immemorial, through the heavy looking arches where the triremes of the Latin city were once moored, form a picture that is preferable to the one just mentioned. Here we have a welcome passage of antique life that we gratefully accept, because it is revived for our benefit with rare delicacy. In it we catch a glimpse of Tanagra's exquisite little figures, and feel communicated to us some of that emotion of a high intelligence, itself affected by its own faculty of restoring the sweet and simple life of the free woman and child of Roman society. But what shall we say of M. KRUG'S Symphorose, and of M. WENCKER'S Impératrice—those enormous canvases, incapable of throwing a gleam of light upon a world that has passed away, that cannot boast a bold line or a vigorous movement to any purpose, any passionate feeling for colour, or any sprightliness of drawing? What is the mission of these dull insipid paintings of the latest academic pedantry in the midst of our young school imbued with the modern spirit? Performances such as these will never lead to a revival of studious inquiry into those great historic epochs on which the genius of Eugène Delacroix brought to bear such generous faculties and such an aspiring pencil when he painted his decorative pieces for the Library of the Chamber of Deputies.

Formerly religious painting occupied an important chapter in the critical notices of the annual Salon. Little need be said to day on this head, in fact, a paragraph will suffice. Painters of religious subjects have been the death of religious art, just as historical painters have killed historical painting. An identical process has succeeded in both cases. Is it necessary to explain the nature of this process? It is the abuse of those formulæ that originated in classical conventions by allowing them to degenerate into mere routine. It is the evolution into bare mechanical method of that patient art which consisted of forming infinite combinations, without any reflection of original thought, of the types which M. Ingres and M. Hippolyte Flandrin revived for a transient hour.

When we have mentioned three or four examples of a higher art than this, we shall have exhausted the subject of religious painting, and to do so much as this some good natured impulse is necessary. M. BENJAMIN CONSTANT'S Christ in the Tomb gives us neither a very new nor a very touching interpretation of the great Christian drama, and the artist has made his work chiefly characteristic of the brilliant colourist M. CAROLUS DURAN who has treated another scene of the same drama—that in which the holy women are washing the feet prior to the burial—has, on the other hand, used great circumspection in the use of his palette. It is by occasionally refusing to subject himself to the exacting demands of fashionable women, in order to refresh himself with the wholesome study of composition—the study of drawing and the nude, it is by this concentration of thought and this return to the starting point of his talent that M. Carolus Duran remains in the Salon the unrivalled master of les hautes élégances in relation to the women of our day. M. J. BULAND has only discovered in the scene of Jesus at the House of Martha and Mary a pretext for harping on one string to the tune of silver white. Notwithstanding a childish affectation of archaism in drawing, nay, by reason of this affectation, it is impossible to take a serious view of this mode of interpreting the New Testament. By this method of his, M. Buland would thus identify himself with the historic legends of past ages, including the Légende dorée, in order to excite an æsthetic curiosity for this false simplicity, for these artifices of colour, but in admitting the excellence of his motive, and while congratulating the young artist on escaping from the beaten paths, we are of opinion that in choosing this field for his efforts he is completely at fault.

Truth, movement, and a power of expressing life in a collective form, while preserving strict accuracy of detail, are the sound qualities of M. ROLL'S great composition—not religious but typically secular—entitled, 14th Juillet, 1880. M. Roll is a brave man. At a time when all fashionable taste is running on picture baubles for the boudoir, he has remained true to the strong and fine attachment of our French masters—the Géricaults and the Delacroix—for large surfaces. We have not forgotten his Inundation nor his beautiful Miners' Strike. It was to the centre of Paris, to a populous and popular quarter, the Place du Château d'Eau, that the young artist betook himself in order to observe the most characteristic illustration of the new Republican fête. The spot was admirably chosen, presenting as it did the most complete picture of Paris on the 14th July, 1880. Such was the exact effect of light produced by the cloud of dust raised by the troops on their march to Longchamps, such was the crowd, too, made up of all classes, from the bourgeoisie to the noisy swarming masses, such were the flower girls, sellers of cockades and tricolours, hawkers of every sort, howlers of the Marseillaise, beggars in rags, women and children in their flaunting summer dresses, and honest citizens dodging among the carriages, trying to find some shade under the official bandstands or gazing at the glaring new paste board statue of the Republic. The perfumed and servent little ladies who dote on M. Vibert and other water-colourists say that M. Roll's 14th July is not distingue, no more so, in fact, than M. GERVEX's Villette Docks and his sunburnt porters carrying coal on their naked backs, their vigorous outlines firmly defined in the clear morning light. The Declaration of Birth, painted by M. BLANCHON for the Mairie of the Nineteenth Arrondissement, full of bustling figures of clerks and other employés moving among the benches, the green portfolios and registers of the "Etat Civil," is truthful, well conceived, and honestly interpreted, but certainly not distingue. Distingue indeed! How can our office life, our daily toil, or our public fete be distingué?

We will not discuss the distribution of medals by the Salon jury: the matter is one that concerns only those immediately interested. Not to mention that the monarchical institution of conferring rewards has grown absolutely ridiculous in a democratic state, but, admitting the principle, their distribution is carried on upon a most defective system, and it moreover opens the door to all manner of intrigues and concessions quite beside the question of art. Let us leave then, to those whom it amuses, this superfluous toy, without troubling ourselves about the wires by which it is worked. The space at our disposal must be devoted to worthier subjects. There remain to be indicated in their several categories, works of note belonging to the French School, and we must speak afterwards of some paintings which, by their superiority or originality,—or still more by the curiosity which they arouse—do not come within any distinct classification.

Of these we have an example in that enormous diptych, Profane and Sacred Music, exhibited by M. G. DUBUFE FILS. This pretty fancy, whose chief fault is its distribution over too wide a surface—this work, so brilliant, light, and airy—so like a soap bubble in its lack of substantiality, as also in its iris-coloured hues—has in reality far higher qualities than the heavily dramatic art which seems to have inspired M JEAN PAUL LAURENS in his Last Moments of the Emperor Maximilian. It would be impossible to put more emphasis and less emotion in the rendering of a tragic scene. This death of Maximilian, this dénouement of the chivalrous but sombre tragedy of the Mexican Empire, this heroic drama which needed for its interpretation the mind of a Shakespeare, the artist was only capable of seeing with the eyes of a bourgeois.

Until the contrary be proved, it must be admitted that a dress coat does not lend itself to æsthetic combinations of the lachrymose or even serious order. This is doubtless why M MANET—and also M de Nittis—has never introduced it except in connection with the picturesque composition of a crowd, as in the Opera Ball, The Breakfast at Father Lathuille's, of former days, and now in his Bar at the Folies Bergère. Those who foresee, as we do, that the pursuit of sujets distingués in painting must result in vapidness and insipidity, have in this last picture by M Manet an illustration in point. No more thorough type of female northlessness could be conceived than the creature whom the artist has installed behind the marble counter, strewn with bottles and fruit. The real merit of the work does not lie in these objects, but in the artist's truthful vision, his use of colour, and his luminous, wave like disposition of light. In all this he triumphs. Unlike M Béraud, who in painting analogous subjects makes his figures stiff and lifeless, M Manet surprises them, so to speak, in their natural movements, and the impression immediately conveyed by his pictures is that of reality in action. This piquant personal interpretation of life marks a new departure in art. It is a direct conquest over the world's exterior phenomena, and one that will not be lost on posterity.

Formed in the robust school of M Lecoq de Boisbaudran, which has given us so many excellent artists, all possessing a strong vein of individuality—such, for instance, as MM Cazin, Fantin Latour, Legros, Georges Bellenger, the brothers Guillaume, Félix and Frédéric Regamey—M LÉON LHERMITTE, not less than M Manet, is enamoured of modern life phenomena, but he seeks them in humble places and under more austere aspects, and almost invariably depicts the customs and manners of the peasantry. Paying the Reapers affords the most complete idea of this profound yet simple, severe yet modest, art. M Lhermitte is a most scrupulous observer of truth, and an enemy to all that and foliage in decorative harmony, M. Gustave Dore, who alone, of all modern masters, has shown himself capable of interpreting the majesty of mountains and the infinitely varying phenomena of light, MM. Pelouse, Bernier, Sege, Pointelin, and Jean Desbrosses who do not put on their neighbours' spectacles to see bits of wood land, shining lakes, sun bathed plains, and foaming torrents, and a few other artists, such as M. Appian, the painter of Provençal roadsides, M. A. Guillon, whose name is so classically associated with the chestnut trees of the Yonne and Vezelay, the old historic town, M. Grandsire, and the spirited Impressionists and MM. Monet, Sisley, Renoir and Pissano.

In this year's Salon a new tendency is to be observed in the work of some young landscape painters, and one well worthy of attention. The peculiarity of this fresh development is not to depict in vague terms a river side, a road, a village, or a forest, but such and such a river, road, or forest in a certain department. This is gratifying, inasmuch as it indicates a return to the sincere love of nature.

I find myself, against my inclination, compelled to give names instead of analyses of artistic works. I must therefore mention MM. Binet, Bouhé, Olive, Montenard, Vuillier, and M. Coquand, who for six or seven years have exhibited in the Salon works imposing by their size and beautiful by their sincerity, although the jury has never condescended to notice them. Nor must I forget M. BARAU, the painter of the Village of Rocks (Touraine), whose youthful yet vigorous talent is perhaps the best justification of my theory respecting the latest evolution of landscape painting. In justice I should add that the exchange of ideas that took place in 1867, and especially in 1878, between ourselves and the English school, brought about this wholesome return to sincere art.

In passing thus rapidly through this Salon, I have unconsciously been influenced by those worn-out traditions which have set up a sort of hierarchy of categories, whereas there are in reality only two styles, the bad and the good. I have, therefore, not yet spoken of certain styles which are accounted of minor importance, such as the one that is so inappropriately described as "genre." This style our English neighbours designate by the much more applicable general term "Biography," with its sub-divisions, "Drama," "Domestic," "Incident," and "Portrait."

To me the picture which best corresponds to the designation "Drama" is M. A. P. Dawant's Funeral at the Invalides. What is chiefly remarkable in this work is the just discrimination with which the processes employed by the artist have been subordinated to the interest of the subject. The beauty of the design lies in the fact that it is extremely exact. The colouring is firm, well sustained, and of a fine consistency. These are not superficial merits. I am well aware of the existence of pictorial power of a more effective kind, which will never cease to enrapture humanity, and prove especially seductive to the dilettante, and again of another order more calculated by its brilliancy to hit the taste of the hour, to attract the ideas, and set them speculating, but I know of nothing displaying greater faithfulness, strength, and durability.

Our pensioners have suggested the subject of another picture in the Salon. Were we to compare the two the comparison would be painful to M. Maurice Poirson, who, being a man of spirit, has put more spirit into his work than sincerity. M. Poirson is, moreover, influenced by the very visible mania for borrowing from the most recent successes of English painters in the matter of inspiration. He is quite able to discover the elements of more certain success in his personal surroundings, without seeking it in the works of other painters of whatever nationality. By the medium of his own emotions he might reflect life in a more direct manner.

From this, and no other source of observation, M. Dagnan Bouveret finds the material for his subjects, and each year witnesses a higher development in his art. After a brief disappearance he comes back to us this year with a canvas of the first order, The Blessing of a Young Bride and Bride-room before Marriage. In this he unites a consummate deftness of pencil to all those resources of the palette which the most picturesque and refined faculty of observation may turn to advantage. For example, he has shown that he can render with surprising skill the two effects of light produced by lit tapers and the glittering radiance of a sunny day, in a picture heavily charged with white—such as that of walls, table cloths, and dresses. How superior is this art, which embodies actuality to that cold and insipid style so weak in inventive power, whose sole merit is its correctness, which has given us M. Jules Lefebvre's Roman Bride, and how different is the æsthetic activity that it reveals to us¹. In the former all has been done by the artist under the impulsion of the moment, consequently such a work once created can never be repeated. In artist. Some sculptors endeavour to represent modern types with the smallest outlay of trouble, by seeking their models in the domestic circle, the street, and the theatre. Witness, Bread, by M ALBERT LEFEUVRE, the Bread Carrier (Porteuse de pain) by M COUTAN, and that life-like ballerina by M SOLDI, entitled At the Opera. If these works are weaker than some others in imaginative power they gain by their quality of boldness, and when such hardihood is supported by the conspicuous talent of artists of equal merit as those mentioned, it is sure to receive a hearty welcome.

This remark applies in a forcible manner to M Zacharie Astruc's statue, which possesses the double quality of boldness and inventiveness. A young éphèbe, with something of the mischievous street boy about him, is supposed to be selling on a national fête day of the intellectual order, portraits of celebrities in the form of masks. In his left hand he holds aloft, as though it were a torch, the mask of Victor Hugo. From his right arm, and suspended to a cord passing over the shoulder, are the masks of Messrs Gambetta, Gounod, and Théodore de Banville. Among the laurel branches at his feet, and on the eight faces of the plinth, are those of Corot, Dumas fils, Berlioz, Carpeaux, Faure, E. Delacroix, Balzac, and Barbey d'Aurevilly. In confiding to this street arab, picked up in some ancient highway perhaps under the shadow of the Parthenon, the task of exhibiting the illustrious representatives of contemporary arts and letters, this most ingenious artist, no doubt, wished to roll back the ages, and unite French genius to its Hellenic origin. This beautiful statue, moulded even to its least important details, as, for instance, the embroidery of the short drawers, the sandals, and the jewellery worn by the marchand de masques, with such artistic devotion, has naturally excited a large amount of curiosity, and obtained a legitimate success. It is so seldom that sculpture now offers us anything besides beautiful fragments of still life, or living nature—according to the school to which the artist belongs, so rarely do our sculptors condescend to put a little intelligence or esprit into their works! But this is not all: they have an evil eye for those who are something more than mechanical artists, who are, like M Zacharie Astruc, or M Gustave Doré, the sculptor of that admirable vase, The Vine, such a marvel of imagination and decorative art. In this work ten generations of our sculptors might find food for reflection, as it is one that the State, the City

THE EXHIBITION OF THE WORKS

OF

COURBET.

AFTER the applause following the gift of the Funeral of Ornans to the Louvre by M^{lle} Juliette Courbet, the purchase by the State of the Streets Fighting, Hallali, The Wounded Man, the Young Man with the Leathern Belt, and the acquisition by the Municipality of Paris of The Siesta, the idea of a general exhibition of COURBET's works was only natural. The public awaited it, and the artists demanded it.

A committee was formed to prepare the Exhibition, the Government offered a hall in the School of Arts, and placed their new purchases at the service of the organisers. There still remained in the hands of the family of the artist a certain number of works, some of which had honourably figured in the annual Salons. Generous amateurs, too, were not wanting who were willing to despoil their galleries and dismantle their walls in the interest of the undertaking. We know what such sacrifices cost, and we are deeply impressed. To all those who in any degree contributed to swell the homage to the memory of a great painter, we here tender our grateful thanks.

By means of their valuable aid the posthumous Exhibition of

Gustave Courbet has been such as his friends desired or he himself could have wished

This Exhibition containing more than one hundred subjects was but a small part of the productions of this robust painter. The rest are scattered abroad or dispersed among our provincial galleries. Amongst the principal canvases unavailable we must cite first The Funeral of Ornans, that a singularly rigorous rule retained at the Louvre, the Quarry, now at Boston, After Dining at Ornans, in the Museum at Lille, The Wheatscreeners, at Nantes, the Stag in the Water, at Marseilles, The Bathers, The Spinning Girl and the Man with the Pipe, at Montpellier. As to the celebrated womeo of Khalil Bey, Idleness and Luxury, which be long at present to one of our most distinguished amateurs, and are known to many Parisians, there could be no question of expos og them

The Exhibition organised at the School of Arts was far from complete. It presented, nevertheless—with its pictures of all styles and sizes landscapes, mannes, soow pieces, animals, flowers, fruit, portraits of men and women, scenes of town and couotry life—the varied aspect of a museum, aod represented the entire career of the artist

As to the artist's private life, I shall be excused from comment iog on it. Spite of the softening effects of time, the moment does not seem to have arrived for a minute and impartial biography. In any case, this is not the place to attempt it.

But by the side of the man there are also his works, which have their history too.

How could we regard once more, after so many years, the Stone breakers, or recall the recollection of the Funeral of Ornans, without remembering the storm that these paintings evoked at their appearance, and the overflowing insults poured upon their courageous initiator, and remembering that tempest of insults, not to inquire into its origin nor to search for the error or partiality by which such a just and powerful style, proclaiming itself at once so democratic and so thoroughly French, could excite so much anger and become a sort of public scandal?

Was the innovation too audacious? Did it contrast too violently with settled habits or prejudices? •

No doubt there was a considerable distance between this indigenous art, taken out of the solitudes of the country, and the traditional style then reigning, and nourished from eternal Greek

and Roman founts, to which had been added, under Louis Philippe, the foreign poets Dante, Shakespeare, and Byron. But without broaching any theory which would be misplaced here we may say that an artist is nowhere forbidden to look around him and borrow from the surrounding society his subjects and models. There are even nations the Belgians and the Dutch, who have no other principle in their art. Can it be said their painting is wanting in character and elevation? Let Rembrandt and Van der Helst reply. Nor is this point of view peculiar to the Low Countries, it is found a little everywhere in Europe. German Holbein and Spanish Velasquez are two admirable painters who have utilised their art to represent the society of their time, and to portray the circle in which they lived. Nor is that all. If we wish to see the truth, do we not find in the works of Raphael himself subjects, and those not the least beautiful of his works, inspired by reality alone? Whence did the Florentine art proceed, and those primitive masters, so highly esteemed now, what was the source of their inspiration?

It seems as if we as a nation forget our own history for was it not truth that Louis David sought above all other things, when, seizing upon events within reach, he designed his Oath of the Tennis players, and traced upon his canvas the revolutionary episodes? Turn also to Géricault. Was there ever a being more intensely possessed by a daily life spirit, or a greater lover of human spectacle? What is his Wreck of the Medusa, if it is not a contemporary episode of the artist, like a positive leading article in a journal, translating into painting the most dramatic of compositions?

Certainly after February, 1848, which brought with it universal suffrage, there was nothing extraordinary in a lowly born painter, republican alike in feeling and education, taking for the object of his art the peasants and the poor amongst whom his infancy had passed. The humility of a subject deprives it in nothing of its æsthetic value, for in art, as in literature, all consists in the handling execution, and style. Courbet wished to paint a village funeral, to show labourers mending the high roads and he had a right to do so. All that could be demanded of him was that his impression should be sincere and strongly expressed. Were these two conditions fulfilled? We know to-day, by the profound unity of his life and work that his sincerity was complete and absolute, and coming to his executive qualities, what artist or connoisseur will contest them? He knew how to invest with a poetic interest scenes common in themselves, which he thereby raised to the highest summit of art, he painted persons taken from the lower grades of the social scale with a gravity, a strength, and degree of character ordinarily reserved for gods, heroes, or kings. It was to pursue on another ground and from another point of sight the suspended work of David and Géricault once more. By what misunderstanding was such a legitimate attempt met by imprecations and cries of fury?

The response is not difficult to give now. The work of Courbet was enveloped in the political reaction of 1850, and, victim of the same hate, it was crushed by the same blows as the Republic of February, which is not astonishing when we compare facts and dates.

In 1849, when the Salon opened, two days after the manifestation of the 13th of June, there was no suspicion attached to the After Dinner at Ornans. Although this work contained the germ of the artist's system, it was far too isolated at the Salon, too drowned amongst an important exhibition of landscapes, to arouse any serious doubts, and in fact it was only made an opportunity of congratulation to its author, to whom a second medal was awarded, a very happy and imprudent recompense, freeing the artist from the verdict of future juries, and permitting him without further restraint to paint in his own fashion for the remainder of his life—a permission of which he made use without delay.

In 1850, I do not know why, the Salon was to open at the end of December for a three months' duration. The nation was passing just then through a particularly gloomy period, and a political reaction exercised an enormous tension. The Right and the President, sometimes together and sometimes separately, hunted the Republic to destruction, and every one, with the exception of Courbet, had a presentiment of the coming catastrophe. He alone, never supposing, besides, that political hurricanes could ever disturb the skies or trouble the peaceful azure of art, immersed himself in his painting and resolved to make a violent effort. He sent in numerous works, which may he incidentally noted as proving an extraordinary capacity for work. There were three large compositions, the Funeral of Ornans, the Storebreakers, and the Return from the Fair, two landscapes from the Banks of the Loue, four portraits, amongst which was his own, afterwards known as The Man with the Pipe, another of Berlioz, that of Francis We, and, in order to testify to his contemporaries that he was in the general movement of ideas, that of Jean Journet setting out for the conquest of universal harmony with his wallet full of socialistic pamphlets.

The painter wished to get spoken of—he succeeded beyond his desires. Who can have forgotten it? It was like a trumpet sound bursting through the exhibition, shaking and shattering the windows.

The artistic side was unseen the personages represented alone were regarded. What? The national studios had been closed, the working classes had been subdued in the streets of Paris, and the middle classes favoured in the Conservatoire! In the Rue de Poitiers ignoble conventicles had arranged old party alliances, universal suffrage had been cut down and three millions of electors disfranchised, and yet here was the vile multitude re-appearing in paint! It was too much! Whence came these peasants, these stonebreakers, these hungry and ragged wretches taking for the first time their mute positions between the nude divinities of Greece and the gentlemen in plumes of the Middle Ages? Nothing less than the sinister advanced guard of Jacques, whom public anxiety, nourished by prevailing rascality and imbecility, represented with torch in hand and knapsack on back, rising to assault the elections of 1852.

The clamour they brought down was overpowering and irresistible, to attempt to discuss, reason, or offer arguments from history or æstheticism, became impossible, and equally so, to listen or obtain a hearing. Indignant notices rained like April showers. Courbet was a charlatan thirsting for mere advertisement, a barbarous stranger to delicacy, a gross ignoramus, and a drunken helot. Never had a brush-holding man seen so many insults flying around him.

He was happily of that hard, calcareous nature which encounters alike showers and thunderbolts without flinching. Nature had even formed him to revel amidst the tempest, and, like Neptune, he laughed at the raging of unchained waves. When the Salon closed he exhibited his works at Besançon, where they met with the same result.

The Second of December arrived, to suppress together liberty and fear. The trembling ceased their agitation, for France was garrotted, and to settle the position, his models, or those who could have served him as such, were transported wholesale.

The state of siege, volleys, and general deportation became grave, and Courbet reflected "If my peasants," said he, "shock the preservers of my country, I can send their wives. The woman of the fields certainly does not meddle with subversive sentiments, so perhaps mine may find grace in the eyes of the new masters of opinion. With his palette knife, therefore, and in one of the loveliest landscapes of Franche Comte, whose heights are crenelated with lofty grey rocks, and in the full and radiant light of day, he placed his Village Ladies bestowing Charity on a Cowherd (1852). On the shores of the river he loved so well, because his youth had been passed by it—the Loue—in the misty light of a clustering wood, pierced by a ray of sunlight gliding from branch to branch, he displayed the carnal splendours of his Bathers (1853), in the silence of a tiny room, near her wheel at rest, softly slumbered his Spinning Girl (1853), and on a grey harmonious background of mingled flour and dust amongst piled up sacks, he designed his Wheatscreeners (1855). They were so many episodes of rustic life, quiet and active by turns, simple touching events, treated according to their subject in a masterly vigour or a ravishing simplicity.

But his female peasant's caused as much disgust as the males. Again was the artistic side confounded with the scene none could see the poetic charm of his Wheatscreeners, and his Spinning Girl was hastily termed a public house wench, whilst the Bathers above all set the pens flying in excitement. One might be accustomed to see mythological nymphs and conventional nudités, but to meet on the thick grass a robust and strongly-developed matron, simply produced shrieks. The artist was accused of a love of triviality, only as the spectre of socialism had disappeared, and the artist's resumption of his pastorals was very inoffensive, some regard was paid to his manner, insult giving way to laughter, and puns, songs and caricatures succeeding epithets.

He felt it was useless to struggle against such minds, for where was the use of frenzy, his life and energy would be misplaced. He resolved, therefore, to seek in another direction, and without abandoning his ideas, avoid giving offence and allow the great consoler, Time, to work for him. But before doing so he wished to collect in a memorable work the seven years just vanished. In 1855 he produced The Studio, the most astonishing by its thoughtfulness as it was the most extraordinary by its workmanship of all his executed works. He is represented in the centre of the work, occupied on a landscape of Franche-Comté, surrounded by friends, visitors, and models. There is his artistic life contained in one page, with a vista of persons, habits, and costumes of the time. What will not be the value of that work in another century? If there existed now such speaking images of the studios of the old masters, of Velasquez, Titian, and Raphael, with what respectful admiration they would be surrounded!

This chapter of his life thus closed, he retook his palette and produced at hazard travels, landscapes, marine pieces, flowers, animals, portraits, hunting scenes, everything that fell in the way of the clearest and best organised vision that ever existed, and without precisely shunning humanity, he paid more attention to nature, for which he felt a tender love. Eager to penetrate the new world he had thus opened for himself, he encountered, like the navigators of old, the happiest surprises, virgin lands, where none had yet set foot, with prospects and landscapes which may be truly said to have hitherto remained undiscovered. He mounted these heights of freedom with dilating lungs, he dived into mysterious antrès, where for him were displayed the curiosities of unknown haunts, and each time that he thus plunged into the bosom of nature, like a man who has been through a hive and comes out covered with honey, he reappeared full of poetry and charm.

He descended the ravines where springs are born in the sweating of the rocks, and witnessed the mingling of these drops of water, letting their mimic cascades glide between his fingers, and saw the brook bubbling between pebbles and moss, and running over its silver sands. None had ever thus painted nature's features so frankly or freely. Who can contemplate the Brook of the Black Well, The Source of the Loue, or the Covered Brook, without fancying the pure breeze on his face coming from those fresh and radiant landscapes where grey rocks, running waters, and green grasses are combined in so many happy ways?

The wide forest, where the trees resembled columns supporting a dome of verdure shot with numberless sunny darts, with its lights and shadows, its silence and its noises, all had for him a singular attraction. Almost as much a hunter as a painter, he more than once interrupted a study to drop his brush and seize his gun for a flying shot. These hunting exploits are recorded in reality far higher qualities than the heavily dramatic art which seems to have inspired M JEAN PAUL LAURENS in his Last Moments of the Emperor Maximilian.⁶ It would be impossible to put more emphasis and less emotion in the rendering of a tragic scene. This death of Maximilian, this denouement of the chivalrous but sombre tragedy of the Mexican Empire, this heroic drama which needed for its interpretation the mind of a Shakespeare, the artist was only capable of seeing with the eyes of a bourgeois.

Until the contrary be proved, it must be admitted that a dress coat does not lend itself to æsthetic combinations of the lachrymose or even serious order. This is doubtless why M MANET—and also M de Nittis—has never introduced it except in connection with the picturesque composition of a crowd, as in the Opera Ball, The Breakfast at Father Lathuille's of former days, and now in his Bar at the Folies Bergère. Those who foresee, as we do, that the pursuit of sujets distingués in painting must result in rapidness and insipidity, have in this last picture by M Manet an illustration in point. No more thorough type of female worthlessness could be conceived than the creature whom the artist has installed behind the marble counter, strewn with bottles and fruit. The real merit of the work does not lie in these objects but in the artist's truthful vision, his use of colour, and his luminous, wave like disposition of light. In all this he triumphs. Unlike M Béraud, who in painting analogous subjects makes his figures stiff and lifeless, M Manet surprises them, so to speak, in their natural movements, and the impression immediately conveyed by his pictures is that of reality in action. This piquant personal interpretation of life marks a new departure in art. It is a direct conquest over the world's exterior phenomena, and one that will not be lost on posterity.

Formed in the robust school of M Lecoq de Boisbaudran, which has given us so many excellent artists, all possessing a strong vein of individuality—such, for instance, as MM Cazin, Fantin Latour, Legros, Georges Bellenger, the brothers Guillaume, Félix and Frédéric Régamey—M LÉON LHERMITTE, not less than M Manet, is enamoured of modern life phenomena, but he seeks them in humble places and under more austere aspects and almost invariably depicts the customs and manners of the peasantry. Paying the Reapers affords the most complete idea of this profound yet simple, severe yet modest, art. M Lhermitte is a most scrupulous observer of truth, and an enemy to all that

and foliage in decorative harmony, M. Gustave Dore, who alone, of all modern masters, has shown himself capable of interpreting the majesty of mountains and the infinitely varying phenomena of light, MM Pelouse, Bernier, Segé, Pointelin, and Jean Desbrosses, who do not put on their neighbours' spectacles to see bits of wood land, shining lakes, sun bathed plains, and foaming torrents, and a few other artists, such as M Appian, the painter of Provençal roadsides, M A Guillon, whose name is so classically associated with the chestnut trees of the Yonne and Vézelay, the old historic town, M Grandsire, and the spirited Impressionists, and MM Monet, Sysley, Renoir, and Pissano

In this year's Salon a new tendency is to be observed in the work of some young landscape painters, and one well worthy of attention. The peculiarity of this fresh development is not to depict in vague terms a river side, a road, a village, or a forest, but such and such a river, road, or forest in a certain department. This is gratifying, inasmuch as it indicates a return to the sincere love of nature

I find myself, against my inclination, compelled to give names instead of analyses of artistic works. I must therefore mention MM Binet, Bouché, Olive, Montenard, Vuillier, and M Coquand, who for six or seven years have exhibited in the Salon works imposing by their size and beautiful by their sincerity, although the jury has never condescended to notice them. Nor must I forget M BARAU, the painter of the Village of Rocks (Touraine), whose youthful yet vigorous talent is perhaps the best justification of my theory respecting the latest evolution of landscape painting. In justice I should add that the exchange of ideas that took place in 1867, and especially in 1878, between ourselves and the English school, brought about this wholesome return to sincere art

In passing thus rapidly through this Salon, I have unconsciously been influenced by those worn out traditions which have set up a sort of hierarchy of categories, whereas there are in reality only two styles, the bad and the good. I have, therefore, not yet spoken of certain styles which are accounted of minor importance, such as the one that is so inappropriately described as "genre." This style our English neighbours designate by the much more applicable general term "Biography," with its subdivisions, "Drama," "Domestic," "Incident," and "Portrait."

To me the picture which best corresponds to the designation "Drama" is M A P. Dawant's Funeral at the Invalides. What is chiefly remarkable in this work is the just discrimination with which the processes employed by the artist have been subordinated to the interest of the subject. The beauty of the design lies in the fact that it is extremely exact. The colouring is firm, well sustained, and of a fine consistency. These are not superficial merits. I am well aware of the existence of pictorial power of a more effective kind, which will never cease to enrapture humanity, and prove especially seductive to the dilettante and again of another order more calculated by its brilliancy to hit the taste of the hour, to attract the ideas, and set them speculating, but I know of nothing displaying greater faithfulness, strength, and durability.

Our pensioners have suggested the subject of another picture in the Salon. Were we to compare the two the comparison would be painful to M Maurice Poirson, who, being a man of spirit, has put more spirit into his work than sincerity. M Poirson is, moreover, influenced by the very visible mania for borrowing from the most recent successes of English painters in the matter of inspiration. He is quite able to discover the elements of more certain success in his personal surroundings, without seeking it in the works of other painters of whatever nationality. By the medium of his own emotions he might reflect life in a more direct manner.

From this, and no other source of observation, M Dagnan Bouveret finds the material for his subjects, and each year witnesses a higher development in his art. After a brief disappearance he comes back to us this year with a canvas of the first order, The Blessing of a Young Bride and Bridegroom before Marriage. In this he unites a consummate deftness of pencil to all those resources of the palette which the most picturesque and refined faculty of observation may turn to advantage. For example, he has shown that he can render with surprising skill the two effects of light produced by lit tapers and the glittering radiance of a sunny day, in a picture heavily charged with white—such as that of walls, table cloths, and dresses. How superior is this art, which embodies actuality to that cold and insipid style so weak in inventive power, whose sole merit is its correctness, which has given us M Jules Lefebvres Roman Bride, and how different is the æsthetic activity that it reveals to us! In the former all has been done by the artist under the impulsion of the moment, consequently such a work once created can never be repeated. In the other case everything has been preconsidered and foreseen and the work of combination required as little effort as the piecing together of marqueterie. M Lefebvre might turn out of hand ten such pictures without fatiguing himself. At a push his pupils might help him and no one would be any the wiser. On the other hand, I defy any one to put a touch to a picture by M Dagnan Bouveret without leaving a blemish, or to take a touch from it without making a hole.

Had I greater space at my command, I should study some other works, such as The Dancer by M LÉON COUVERRE, the Algerian Habitation, by M GUILLAUMET, the Idyl, by M R. COLLIN, the Fishing Smack, by M MAURICE COURANT, the Beach of Morsalines, by M GUILLEMET, M QUOST'S flowers, and Mlle LOUISE DESBORDES' fish. I would also draw attention to some promising beginners, such as M ROCHEGROSSE, the painter of Vitellius, M GUSTAVE POPELIN, who exhibits a fine portrait of our confrère M Henri Lavoix, and M RENÉ GILBERT, who besides a finely drawn and richly coloured piece, An Awkward Blow, exhibits some drawings, two admirable pastels, and two portraits of men done at a single sitting, with an amount of verve, vigour of touch, effect of colour and expression that augurs well of the prosperous future awaiting the painter.

Being safe from the suspicion of flattery towards French artists, I do not hesitate to say that our school of sculpture is without rival in Europe. But in statuary, as in painting two very distinct æsthetic currents are perceptible. In the few lines that follow I shall only speak of those who, by their exceptional talent, may be regarded as typically representative of each. Some, like M CHAPU in his Immortality, M LANSON in his Iron Age, and M GUILBERT in his Eve, are evidently preoccupied with the idealisation or abstraction of forms. Their objective is the nude and the perfect beauty of the nude, according to the Christian conception of the clay fresh moulded by the hands of the Creator and animated by his breath. The intention is a noble one, and when the height thus sought is reached, the pride that humanity so justly takes in these objects is not so much inspired by what they have already accomplished, as by the prospect of what may still be done in the same direction. It is delightful to contemplate itself, as it were, in the sacred mirror of its origin. But, alas! for every masterpiece, how many thousands of worthless performances there are—works absolutely expressionless turned out of hand, and with imperturbable self sufficiency, from moulds supplied by the dozeo in accordance with the canons of a lifeless correctness, and having nothing in common with the living canons of grandeur and plastic beauty.

The other style—in respect of which Carpeaux played the part of Moses the day when he struck the rock with his rod, that is to say, the classic marble, with his powerful chisel—is that which impels a number of our sculptors to reflect in their work the living being, to transfer the palpitating flesh to clay, marble, and bronze. The most striking example of this new phase of art in the Salon of 1882 has been afforded by M. FALGUIÈRE. By the mere force of inveterate mental habit which he could not resist, the artist has given to his female figure the mythological name of Diana. This is a final concession to Chrompré's dictionary—the sole dictionary which sculptors formerly troubled to read, and which served for a century to give to every statue its etat-civil. The concession, however, was useless, for at the rate we are going in the direction of naturalism, who in France, twenty years hence, will care anything about Diana? In point of fact, M. Falguière only thought of Diana in order to place in the hands of his model a bow instead of a duster or a broom. We must not think of Diana in this connection, but of Françoise, Jeannoton, or Adèle, or the pretty charcutière round the corner. Here, then, we have an illustration of what can be done by manual dexterity that comes of experience, coupled with natural gifts, all that is wanting in it is a certain idea of art. In the interest of sincerity and truth, the artist, instead of writing on the base of his statue the name of Diana, the slim and boy-like huntress, should have simply put, "Study after the living model." Then we should have easily recognised in the vivacious model a woman of mature beauty, and fascinations of thirty years of age. It matters little whether it be called Diana or Adèle, this figure in the Salon sums up the most vigorous movement in statuary art of the present day.

Other artists endeavour to reflect actual life, not only in the nude, but in subjects of a less vague as well as of a less ambitious order, in sympathy with contemporary notions. Curious examples of what is here meant are to be found in the works which a young sculptor has contributed to two successive Salons. Last year he exhibited a very remarkable figure, entitled The Dying Vine, and he gives us this year the Source de l'Al Jure. M. Bastet has thus entered upon an original path, full of new and charming suggestions in relation to our civilisation at the disposal of the plastic

artist Some sculptors endeavour to represent modern types with the smallest outlay of trouble, by seeking their models in the domestic circle, the street, and the theatre Witness, Bread, by M ALBERT LEFEUVRE, the Bread Carrier (Porteuse de pain) by M COUTAN, and that life like ballerina by M SOLDI, entitled At the Opera If these works are weaker than some others in imaginative power they gain by their quality of boldness, and when such hardihood is supported by the conspicuous talent of artists of equal merit as those mentioned, it is sure to receive a hearty welcome

This remark applies in a forcible manner to M Zacharie Astruc's statue, which possesses the double quality of boldness and inventiveness A young ephebos, with something of the mischievous street boy about him, is supposed to be selling on a national fete day of the intellectual order, portraits of celebrities in the form of masks In his left hand he holds aloft, as though it were a torch, the mask of Victor Hugo From his right arm, and suspended to a cord passing over the shoulder, are the masks of Messrs Gambetta, Gounod, and Théodore de Banville Among the laurel branches at his feet, and on the eight faces of the plinth, are those of Corot, Dumas fils, Berlioz, Carpeaux, Faure, E Delacroix, Balzac, and Barbey d'Aureville In confiding to this street arab, picked up in some ancient highway perhaps under the shadow of the Parthenon, the task of exhibiting the illustrious representatives of contemporary arts and letters, this most ingenious artist, no doubt, wished to roll back the age, and unite French genius to its Hellenic origin This beautiful statue, moulded even to its least important details, as, for instance, the embroidery of the short drawers, the sandals, and the jewellery worn by the marchand de masques, with such artistic devotion, has naturally excited a large amount of curiosity, and obtained a legitimate success It is so seldom that sculpture now offers us anything besides beautiful fragments of still life, or living nature—according to the school to which the artist belongs, so rarely do our sculptors condescend to put a little intelligence or esprit into their works! But this is not all they have an evil eye for those who are something more than mechanical artists, who are, like M Zacharie Astruc, or M Gustave Doré, the sculptor of that admirable vase, The Vine, such a marvel of imagination and decorative art In this work ten generations of our sculptors might find food for reflection, as it is one that the State, the City

Gustave Courbet has been such as his friends desired or he himself could have wished.

This Exhibition, containing more than one hundred subjects, was but a small part of the productions of this robust painter. The rest are scattered abroad or dispersed among our provincial galleries. Amongst the principal canvases unavailable we must cite first The Funeral of Ornans, that a singularly rigorous rule retained at the Louvre, the Quarry, now at Boston, After Dining at Ornans, in the Museum at Lille, The Wheatstackers, at Nantes, the Stag in the Water, at Marseilles, The Bathers, The Spinning Girl, and the Man with the Pipe, at Montpellier. As to the celebrated women of Khalil Bey, Idleness and Luxury, which belong at present to one of our most distinguished amateurs, and are known to many Parisians, there could be no question of exposing them.

The Exhibition organised at the School of Arts was far from complete. It presented, nevertheless—with its pictures of all styles and sizes, landscapes, manne, snow pieces, animals, flowers, fruit, portraits of men and women, scenes of town and country life—the varied aspect of a museum, and represented the entire career of the artist.

As to the artist's private life, I shall be excused from commenting on it. Spite of the softening effects of time, the moment does not seem to have arrived for a minute and impartial biography. In any case, this is not the place to attempt it.

But by the side of the man there are also his works, which have their history too.

How could we regard once more, after so many years, the Stone breakers, or recall the recollection of the Funeral of Ornans, without remembering the storm that these paintings evoked at their appearance, and the overflowing insults poured upon their courageous initiator, and remembering that tempest of insults, not to inquire into its origin nor to search for the error or partiality by which such a just and powerful style, proclaiming itself at once so democratic and so thoroughly French, could excite so much anger and become a sort of public scandal?

Was the innovation too audacious? Did it contrast too violently with settled habits or prejudices?

No doubt there was a considerable distance between this indigenous art, taken out of the solitudes of the country, and the traditional style then reigning, and nourished from eternal Greek

THE EXHIBITION OF THE WORKS OF COURBET.

AFTER the applause following the gift of the Funeral of Ornans to the Louvre by M^{lle} Juliette Courbet, the purchase by the State of the Stags Fighting, Hallali, The Wounded Man, the Young Man with the Leathern Belt, and the acquisition by the Municipality of Paris of The Siesta, the idea of a general exhibition of COURBET'S works was only natural. The public awaited it, and the artists demanded it.

A committee was formed to prepare the Exhibition, the Government offered a hall in the School of Arts, and placed their new purchases at the service of the organisers. There still remained in the hands of the family of the artist a certain number of works, some of which had honourably figured in the annual Salons. Generous amateurs, too, were not wanting who were willing to despoil their galleries and dismantle their walls in the interest of the undertaking we know what such sacrifices cost, and we are deeply impressed.* To all those who in any degree contributed to swell the homage to the memory of a great painter, we here tender our grateful thanks.

By means of their valuable aid the posthumous Exhibition of

Gustave Courbet has been such as his friends desired or he himself could have wished

This Exhibition, containing more than one hundred subjects, was but a small part of the productions of this robust painter. The rest are scattered abroad or dispersed among our provincial galleries. Amongst the principal canvases unavailable we must cite first The Funeral of Ornans, that a singularly rigorous rule retained at the Louvre, the Quarry, now at Boston, After Dining at Ornans, in the Museum at Lille, The Wheatstackers, at Nantes, the Stag in the Water, at Marseilles, The Bathers, The Spinning Girl, and the Man with the Pipe, at Montpellier. As to the celebrated women of Khahl Bey, Idleness and Luxury, which be long at present to one of our most distinguished amateurs, and are known to many Parisians, there could be no question of exposing them.

The Exhibition organised at the School of Arts was far from complete. It presented, nevertheless—with its pictures of all styles and sizes, landscapes, marines, snow pieces, animals, flowers, fruit, portraits of men and women, scenes of town and country life—the varied aspect of a museum, and represented the entire career of the artist.

As to the artist's private life, I shall be excused from commenting on it. Spite of the softening effects of time, the moment does not seem to have arrived for a minute and impartial biography. In any case, this is not the place to attempt it.

But by the side of the man there are also his works, which have their history too.

How could we regard once more, after so many years, the Stone breakers, or recall the recollection of the Funeral of Ornans, without remembering the storm that these paintings evoked at their appearance, and the overflowing insults poured upon their courageous initiator, and remembering that tempest of insults, not to inquire into its origin nor to search for the error or partiality by which such a just and powerful style, proclaiming itself at once so democratic and so thoroughly French, could excite so much anger and become a sort of public scandal?

Was the innovation too audacious? Did it contrast too violently with settled habits or prejudices?

No doubt there was a considerable distance between this indigenous art, taken out of the solitudes of the country, and the traditional style then reigning, and nourished from eternal Greek and Roman founts, to which had been added, under Louis Philippe, the foreign poets, Dante, Shakespeare, and Byron. But without broaching any theory which would be misplaced here we may say that an artist is nowhere forbidden to look around him and borrow from the surrounding society his subjects and models. There are even nations, the Belgians and the Dutch, who have no other principle in their art. Can it be said their painting is wanting in character and elevation? Let Rembrandt and Van der Helst reply. Nor is this point of view peculiar to the Low Countries: it is found a little everywhere in Europe. German Holbein and Spanish Velasquez are two admirable painters who have utilised their art to represent the society of their time, and to portray the circle in which they lived. Nor is that all. If we wish to see the truth, do we not find in the works of Raphael himself subjects, and those not the least beautiful of his works, inspired by reality alone? Whence did the Florentine art proceed, and those primitive masters, so highly esteemed now, what was the source of their inspiration?

It seems as if we as a nation forget our own history, for was it not truth that Louis David sought above all other things, when, seizing upon events within reach, he designed his Oath of the Tennis players, and traced upon his canvas the revolutionary episodes? Turn also to Gericault. Was there ever a being more intensely possessed by a daily life spirit, or a greater lover of human spectacle? What is his Wreck of the Medusa, if it is not a contemporary episode of the artist, like a positive leading article in a journal, translating into painting the most dramatic of compositions?

Certainly after February, 1848, which brought with it universal suffrage, there was nothing extraordinary in a lowly born painter republican alike in feeling and education, taking for the object of his art the peasants and the poor amongst whom his infancy had passed. The humility of a subject deprives it in nothing of its æsthetic value, for in art, as in literature, all consists in the handling, execution, and style. Courbet wished to paint a village funeral, to show labourers mending the high roads, and he had a right to do so. All that could be demanded of him was that his impression should be sincere and strongly expressed. Were these two conditions fulfilled? We know to day, by the profound unity of his life and work, that his sincerity was complete and absolute, and coming to his executive qualities, what artist or connoisseur will contest them? He knew how to invest with a poetic interest scenes common in themselves, which he, thereby raised to the highest summit of art, he painted persons taken from the lower grades of the social scale with a gravity, a strength, and degree of character ordinarily reserved for gods, heroes, or kings. It was to pursue on another ground and from another point of sight the suspended work of David and Gericault once more. By what misunderstanding was such a legitimate attempt met by imprecations and cries of fury?

The response is not difficult to give now. The work of Courbet was enveloped in the political reaction of 1850, and, victim of the same hate, it was crushed by the same blows as the Republic of February, which is not astonishing when we compare facts and dates.

In 1849, when the Salon opened, two days after the manifestation of the 13th of June, there was no suspicion attached to the After Dinner at Ornans. Although this work contained the germ of the artist's system, it was far too isolated at the Salon, too drowned amongst an important exhibition of landscapes, to arouse any serious doubts, and in fact it was only made an opportunity of congratulation to its author, to whom a second medal was awarded, a very happy and imprudent recompense, freeing the artist from the verdict of future juries, and permitting him without further restraint to paint in his own fashion for the remainder of his life—a permission of which he made use without delay.

In 1850, I do not know why, the Salon was to open at the end of December for a three months' duration. The nation was passing just then through a particularly gloomy period, and a political reaction exercised an enormous tension. The Right and the President, sometimes together and sometimes separately, hunted the Republic to destruction, and every one, with the exception of Courbet, had a presentiment of the coming catastrophe. He alone, never supposing, besides, that political hurricanes could ever disturb the skies or trouble the peaceful azure of art, immersed himself in his painting and resolved to make a violent effort. He sent in numerous works, which may be incidentally noted as proving an extraordinary capacity for work. There were three large compositions, the Funeral of Ornans, the Stonebreakers, and the Return from the Fair—two landscapes from the Banks of the Loue, four portraits, amongst which was his own, afterwards known as The Man with the Pipe, another of Berlioz, that of

Francis Wey, and, in order to testify to his contemporaries that he was in the general movement of ideas, that of Jean Journet setting out for the conquest of universal harmony with his wallet full of socialistic pamphlets

The painter wished to get spoken of—he succeeded beyond his desires. Who can have forgotten it? It was like a trumpet sound bursting through the exhibition, shaking and shattering the windows

The artistic side was useless: the personages represented alone were regarded. What? The national studios had been closed, the working classes had been subdued in the streets of Paris, and the middle classes favoured in the Conservatoire! In the Rue de Poitiers ignoble conventions had arranged old party alliances, universal suffrage had been cut down, and three millions of electors disfranchised, and yet here was the vile multitude reappearing in paint! It was too much! Where came these peasants, these stone-breakers, these hungry and ragged wretches taking for the first time their mute positions between the nude divinities of Greece and the gentlemen in plumes of the Middle Ages? Nothing less than the sinister advanced guard of Jacquet, whom public anxiety, nourished by prevailing rascality and imbecility, represented with torch in hand and knapsack on back, rising to assault the elections of 1852

The clamour they brought down was overpowering and irresistible, to attempt to discuss, reason, or offer arguments from history or æstheticism, became impossible, and equally so, to listen or obtain a hearing. Indignant notices rained like April showers. Courbet was a charlatan thirsting for mere advertisement, a barbarous stranger to delicacy, a gross ignoramus, and a drunken helot. Never had a brush-holding man seen so many insults flying around him.

He was happy of that hard, calcareous nature which encounters alike showers and thunderbolts without flinching. Nature had even formed him to revel amidst the tempest, and, like Neptune, he laughed at the raging of unchained waves. When the Salon closed he exhibited his works at Besançon, where they met with the same result.

The Second of December arrived, to suppress together liberty and fear. The trembling ceased their agitation, for France was garrotted, and to settle the position, his models, or those who could have served him as such, were transported wholesale

The state of siege, volleys, and general deportation became grave, and Courbet reflected. "If my peasants," said he, "shock the preservers of my country, I can send their wives. The woman of the fields certainly does not meddle with subversive sentiments, so perhaps mine may find grace in the eyes of the new masters of opinion." With his palette knife, therefore, and in one of the loveliest landscapes of Franche Comté, whose heights are crenelated with lofty grey rocks, and in the full and radiant light of day, he placed his Village Ladies bestowing Charity on a Coucheré (1852). On the shores of the river he loved so well, because his youth had been passed by it—the Loue—in the misty light of a clustering wood, pierced by a ray of sunlight gliding from branch to branch, he displayed the carnal splendours of his Bathers (1853), in the silence of a tiny room, near her wheel at rest, softly slumbered his Spinning Girl (1853), and on a grey harmonious background of mingled flour and dust, amongst piled up sacks, he designed his Wheat-screens (1855). They were so many episodes of rustic life, quiet and active by turns, simple touch of events, treated according to their subject in a masterly vigour or a ravishing simplicity.

But his female peasants caused as much disgust as the males. Again was the artistic side confounded with the scene—none could see the poetic charm of his Wheat-screens, and his Spinning Girl was hastily termed a public-house wench, whilst the Bathers above all set the pens flying in excitement. One might be accustomed to see mythological nymphs and conventional nudes, but to meet on the thick grass a robust and strongly developed matron, simply produced shrieks. The artist was accused of a love of triviality, only as the spectre of socialism had disappeared, and the artist's resumption of his pastorals was very inoffensive, some regard was paid to his mania, insult giving way to laughter, and poems, songs and caricatures succeeding epithets.

He felt it was useless to struggle against such minds, for where was the use of frenzy, his life and energy would be misplaced. He resolved, therefore, to seek in another direction, and without abandoning his ideas, avoid giving offence and allow the great consoler, Time, to work for him. But before doing so he wished to collect in a memorable work the seven years just vanished. In 1855 he produced The Studio, the most astonishing by its thoughtfulness as it was the most extraordinary by its workmanship of all his executed works. He is represented in the centre of the work, occupied on a landscape of Franche Comté, surrounded by friends, visitors, and models. There is his artistic life contained in one page, with a vista of persons, habits, and costumes of the time. What will not be the value of that work in another century? If there existed now such speaking images of the studios of the old masters, of Velasquez, Titian, and Raphael, with what respectful admiration they would be surrounded!

This chapter of his life thus closed, he retook his palette and produced at hazard travels, landscapes, marine pieces, flowers, animals, portraits, hunting scenes, everything that fell in the way of the clearest and best organised vision that ever existed, and without precisely shunning humanity, he paid more attention to nature, for which he felt a tender love. Eager to penetrate the new world he had thus opened for himself, he encountered, like the navigators of old, the happiest surprises, virgin lands, where none had yet set foot, with prospects and landscapes which may be truly said to have hitherto remained undiscovered. He mounted these heights of freedom with dilating lungs, he dived into mysterious anfrs, where for him were displayed the curiosities of unknown haunts, and each time that he thus plunged into the bosom of nature, like a man who has been through a hive and comes out covered with honey, he reappeared full of poetry and charm.

He descended the ravines where springs are born in the sweating of the rocks, and witnessed the mingling of these drops of water, letting their mimic cascades glide between his fingers, and saw the brook bubbling between pebbles and moss, and running over its silver sands. None had ever thus painted nature's features so frankly or freely. Who can contemplate the Brook of the Black Well, The Source of the Loue, or the Covered Brook, without fancying the pure breeze on his face coming from those fresh and radiant landscapes where grey rocks, running waters, and green grasses are combined in so many happy ways?

The wide forest, where the trees resembled columns supporting a dome of verdure shot with numberless sunny darts, with its lights and shadows, its silence and its noises, all had for him a singular attraction. Almost as much a hunter as a painter, he more than once interrupted a study to drop his brush and seize his gun for a flying shot. These hunting exploits are recorded in

Beauvais, then in the zenith of its prosperity, sent forth the Scènes de la Table, on a maize coloured ground, by Boucher, the History of Don Quixote, from the designs of Coypel, as also, a little later, those Jeux Russiens, after Le Prince, which, hung at the farther end of the Chambre Louis XVI, so artistically disposed here, have absolutely the dull charm of a well touched gouache.

The sale of the Duke of Hamilton's collections has just revealed to the public the enormous prices privately attained during the past few years by five specimens of eighteenth century furniture. Did not one of the leading barons in the financial world pay 730 000 francs for a chest of drawers inlaid with Sèvres china? What sum might not be reached by the staircase lamp here suspended in the passage from the bedroom to the second Salle Louis XVI, and which comes from the Trianon? Never, in any other country or at any other period, has there been produced an equally exquisite effect with the same sobriety of treatment: a little bronze, chiselled and gilt on a bluish ground, arrow headed uprights, arched brackets, a girdle consisting of rural emblems and musical instruments, and just two little figures of infant satyrs.

Patrons of art and foreign museums have acted wisely in arming themselves with formidable rolls of bank notes, to secure those escritoirs in marqueterie, those tables at which young matrons according to the engravings of Moreau the younger, drank the broth which followed the ceremony of their churching, those desks and box stands which the Convention saved from the hands of the foreigner, by distributing them throughout the ministerial departments, those scarcely curved couches, the backs of which are crowned with bouquets of flowerets, as finely hollowed out in the wood as if the instrument had attacked a tough piece of metal.

A little bit of furniture in an adjacent room contains the entire æsthetics of this school before it was spoilt through the mad imitation of the antique, as brought into fashion by the discoveries at Herculaneum and Pompeii, and eulogised to such excess by the Abbé Barthélemy in his "Voyage du Jeune Anacharsis." It is a very small desk, with a door that unrolls, supported on four slightly curved feet. It belongs to the active and courteous Vice President of the Central Union, M. Boulhet. Eugène Delacroix wrote of it as follows:—"There are some marvellous lines here: the straight, the regular serpentine, and, above all, two serpentes. When man creates them the elements gnaw them away." The man who created this desk wished it to be taken in its curves, above, below, in front, behind, and at the sides—he has made of it an expression of the most undulating harmony.

It is well, therefore, that such examples should be placed under the eyes of our manufacturers and industrial artists. They manifest vigour in their execution, signed, as they are, by such hands as those of Boule, Caffieri, Reisener, Gouthière, and Thomire. They impel them to resume the French method, which underwent considerable deterioration under the influence of the Roman pedantry, and holds supreme sway in the upper regions of instruction. What could be more ingenious than the vase offered by the City of Paris to General Lafayette, and signed "Thomire, 1785"—the British leopard in chains the Gallic cock crowing a salute to the aurora of Liberty, and syrens ornamenting the prows of the city? What a pretty distribution of forms, profiles, light, and colour!

In a quiet little room, however, occupied, we believe, by the exhibits of M. Pecquereau, our manufacturers ought to seek hints that will enable them to supply the public with furniture, &c., of a less hard and "staring" kind than that which followed the Empire and Restoration. In this salle is to be found the pretty bourgeois furniture of the eighteenth century, represented in the vignettes of Hubert Gravelot—the round backed fauteuils, cane bottomed chairs, the marble consoles, the brackets so admirably adapted to filling out-of-the-way corners, the buffet, behind the glass doors of which glittered the faïences of Nevers and Rouen, the Normandy wardrobe, enlivened with billing doves and garlands of roses, or a bunch of corn surmounted by apple clusters! Such is real French art!

Let us pass to the room reserved for the produce of the extreme East. Left and right were cases containing a complete series of woven fabrics from the twelfth century, and probably even from the eighth, down to the commencement of the Revolution. A more than passing reference to this section would lead us into over lengthy details. The Musée de Lyon has clearly proved that Philippe de la Salle, who worked for the manufacturers under Louis XVI, was a painter and designer of considerable taste. Not only must silken fabrics of superior quality and colouring be employed, but they must be adapted to the particular decorative period, and the fact that he thoroughly understood this necessity explains the extent to which the stuffs in question were chosen for dresses, waistcoats, and curtains in France and other countries. Feminine taste has now abandoned damasks and delicately or sumptuously embroidered fabrics in favour of smooth stuffs, the tints of which are no doubt infinitely varied and charming. The dyer and dressmaker have carried the day, and we can only hope that the fashion will change.

In the Oriental room, colour was all powerful. Scarcely any furniture is used in China or Japan, where soft fine woven cloth is so much worn that the natives seem to care little about the comfort of arm-chairs or beds. The Japanese take their meals at tables as low as those used by the ancient Romans and concentrate their ideas of luxury in statuettes and the mural adornment of their apartments. No country produces finer, more prettily grained specimens of the pine tree than are to be found in the primeval forests of Nippon. The Mikado's apartments are said to be entirely free from gilt, colouring, or varnish, and depend for ornamentation on the artistic manner in which different kinds of woods are blended, inlaid, and arranged.

Mr Bing who unites the qualities of a critical collector to information personally acquired in Japan, greatly contributed, with his multi coloured cloths, screens, and innumerable other knick-knacks, to the adornment of this room. He exhibited light cedar panels inlaid with strips of some black wood so delicately and neatly that a close examination was required to decide that Indian ink had not been employed with a fine brush. M. Proust, the President of the Union des Arts Décoratifs, and the untiring promoter of the proposed Musée des Arts Décoratifs, lent for exhibition a many hued wooden screen wonderfully inlaid with figures in painted ivory. Besides this, in the compartments allotted to M. Montefiore, M. de Vigan, and the writer of these lines (to use the recognised formula), were to be seen wooden statuettes, curiously and strikingly carved, and set ukas, or fancy buttons, which are used to attach a pipe or writing case to the girdle.

But we must not forget to mention the square pieces of embroidered cloth, called fukus, in which are enveloped, for transmission by a servant, the presents to be sent to a relative or a neighbour. The designs are supplied by designers, and are subsequently copied with the needle by embroiderers, who, by alternating and changing the direction of the silk, obtain an intense sheen and play of colour, and evolve birds, landscapes, coats of arms, flowers, battles, &c. These extraordinary artists are thoroughly skilled in delighting the eye and imagination, and we may add that M. Lansyer, the landscape painter, possesses a unique collection of their products—apricot, yellow, peach-tint, salmon, lobster red, pale lilac, light cream, dove coloured, burnished brown, &c., just as in the music of the Greeks there are tones and fractions of tones, while we barbarians are content with simple sharps and flats. Our decorative artists are too stiff and prim, and ought to allow themselves to submit to the intoxication of these brilliant, heady, seductive combinations.

Paper succeeds wood and tissue, but in its case we must refer amateurs to the catalogue, which has been carefully drawn up by competent men. It abounds with dates, names of works which are scarcely ever met with, even in the public libraries, and mentions of rare prints.

M. Eugene Dutuit, of Rouen, contributed from his portfolios engravings typical of the leading masters and schools. M. Victorien Sardou lent a history of costumes, including productions of Cosway and Rowlandson, little known in France, M. Beurdeley, designs of ornaments and delicious vignettes by that forgotten Gabriel de Saint Aubin that the De Goncourts rediscovered, M. Eugene Piot, titles of Italian books, M. Lesouffacher, architectural specimens, &c. &c.

In conclusion, we may draw attention to the history of paper in France, collated by Poferlet, and extending the whole length of the inner gallery. It represents painted paper, replacing, in the third quarter of the eighteenth century, tapestry and mural decorations, passing from the pupils of Boucher to Prud'hon, Laffite, Carle Vernet, Zuher, Chabal Dussurgey, Muller, and retaining characteristics of French art which have vanished from many professions and pursuits.

The Union Centrale has deserved well of all, and its objects are original and useful. It would do still better were it to inculcate honesty and conscientiousness in manufactures.

PH. BURT,

Inspecteur des Beaux Arts.

EXHIBITIONS AT THE CLUBS.

THE Clubs, the number of which is increasing year by year, and which occupy at the present day a position of real social importance, must be henceforth something more than mere resorts for idle pleasure seekers

The most important among them have entered readily into the artistic movement which seems to be taking Paris by storm.

The Cercle de l'Union Artistique, known in the language of the Boulevards as "Les Mercatons," was the first to take the lead in the matter. If its example has been since followed by others, this in no way detracts from the large share of public favour which it drew to itself at the time, and which it has since managed to retain. Its exhibitions, which are held in a magnificent room on the club premises in the Place Vendôme, are patronised as, according to their desserts, they should be.

All the same we must bear in mind that the Exhibition of 1882 has not come up to the standard of its predecessors in supplying the public with the usual collection of remarkable works.

After having noticed a few pictures by Bonnat, Meissonier, and Carolus Duran, and some pieces of statuary by Franceschi and M. d'Épinay, we shall have nothing more to say on the subject of its works of art this year.

The Cercle Artistique et Littéraire, vulgarly called the "Cremerie," occupies the second place of rank among Parisian clubs, and largely attracts the public to its exhibitions. It is presided over by a body of vigorous and energetic minds, who spare themselves no trouble in the work they have in hand, and who succeed yearly in rendering the large gallery of the Rue de Volney the resort of persons of the most varied tastes and capabilities.

The number of works exhibited this year has been considerable. It comprised upwards of two hundred and sixty pictures, fifty drawings, including water-colours and crayons, and sixteen specimens of sculpture. The productions especially deserving of notice have been those of Bastien Lepage, Bouguereau, Henner, Lannais, and Barillot, and some fine portraits by Bonnat, Baudry, Elie Delaunay, and Paul Ferrier.

The exhibition of the works of lady-artists under the auspices of this club offers fewer points of interest. It seems that women, without the aid of their male-compeers in art, are unable to furnish an exhibition with works of merit sufficient to render it generally attractive. The vine needs the support of the elm.

A new club, that of the Cercle Artistique de la Seine, has managed to secure for itself, even by its maiden stroke, a creditable place among the clubs of Paris, whose business is to take cognisance of the fine arts. This will readily be believed when are cited the names of such men as Henner, Guillemet, Feytaud, Perrin, Vollon, Ballavoine, Ribot, Gervex, Stevens, Dédalle, Lerolle, Vuillefroy, and Humbert.

The Cercle des Arts Libéraux, wishing to lay just claim to its name, which may be regarded as a title, as well as a simple appellation, has, from the first year of its institution, been in the habit of organising, in one of the most charming spots of Paris, some very interesting exhibitions, at which the arts of painting, sculpture, and drawings in water-colours are equally well represented. Apart from its own annual and attractive exhibition, the Cercle des Arts Libéraux has courteously made offer of the use of its rooms to the association of lady-artists, whose début deserves notice rather as an augury of what is to be, than as a result of what has been.

The painters in water-colours, united into a rich and powerful association, and comprising from fifteen to twenty of the most distinguished names in the Paris art world, after having occupied for three years a simple ground floor in the Rue Laffitte, are now located in the Rue de Sèze, in a splendid building which M. Georges Petit has had constructed for them—and for himself.

The event of transition from the old site to the new was marked by the display of a fine collection of masterpieces, bearing, among other noted signatures, those of Madeleine Lemaire and MM Ferdinand Heilbuth, Jules Worms, Édouard Detaille, Isabey, Eugène Lami, Henri Harpignes, Ducez, Jourdain, Gustave Doré, John Lewis Brown, Louis and Maurice Leloir. The whole presented an admirable collection, leaving nothing to be desired in the matter of execution or composition.

Shortly afterwards the same gallery was adapted to the purposes of an exhibition of another kind—one calculated to draw crowds of admirers, which in fact it did for a period of some weeks.

This was an International Exhibition of Painting, in which Italy was represented by M de Nittis, Germany, by M. Knaus and Menzel, Austria, by M Charlemont, Belgium, by MM Alfred Stevens, Spain, by M de Madrazo, France, by MM. Jules Dupre, Gerome, and Baudry; England, by MM Millais and Alma Tadema, Sweden, by M. Wahlberg, Holland, by M Israëls, Russia, by MM Bogolubof and Pokitonow. Two or three similar exhibitions in the course of a year are sufficient to crown it with artistic honours.

This exhibition of the works of foreign artists naturally leads us to speak of that of the Scandinavian Painters, which was inaugurated with much taste and judgment in the Avenue de l'Opéra by a young Norwegian dilettante, M Pétersen Gade, to whom we are indebted for the privilege of having been able to obtain a glimpse of the present stage of the Scandinavian School of painting. All true lovers of painting have passed some delightful hours in company with the works of such men as Normann, Hans-Gude, Hans-Heyerdahl, Ludwig Munthe, de Gerfelt, Auguste Jernberg, Christian Skredsvig, and Nicolai Nelsten.

From this catalogue of names we ought not to omit that of Hugo Salmson, who so soon embraced the ways and manners of Paris life, that of Wahlberg, the poet of painting, or those of some charming lady-artists like Mademoiselle Christine Post and Mademoiselle Schielderup. Some of these patronymics may at first present difficulties of pronunciation to English tongues, but a little familiarity with the works of the artists soon enables one to enjoy with relish such delightful specimens of foreign art. They display simplicity in design and execution, are true to nature, and are pervaded by a tender tone of feeling.

One of the characteristics of the year which is about to close has been a tendency to specialities. The artists have separated themselves into groups as it were, each following its especial line of work. If this kind of thing continues, the art world may possibly lose in unity what it gains in variety. The animal painters, for instance, form a sort of school apart, one which threatens to become exclusive, and which already regards itself as a recognised institution.

This body of painters held their exhibition in the Rue Saint Honoré, in the rooms of the Panorama of Reichshoffen, and succeeded in attracting a fair share of visitors, for in Paris there are sight-seers for everything.

The names of those whose works shone most conspicuously in this somewhat restricted field of art are well known to the public, and appreciated accordingly. They were Barillot, Jules Didier, Ferdinand Chaigneau, Diéterle, Brunet Houard, Édouard Grand Jean, Gridelle, Albert de Geſne, Olivier de Penne, Melin, Charles Jacque, de Vuillefroy, Veyrassat, Princetau, Camille Paris, and Hermann Léon. These artists both love and understand nature, and know how to represent her with an admirable fidelity.

The Artistes Indépendants have continued this year their insignificant and useless manifestations. They raised a standard which no one will think of contesting with them, and which will certainly never lead them to the goal of victory. The aberrations to which a body of about thirty ambitious individuals are constantly subject, is a matter to be deplored, especially as some among them possess considerable talent, yet, after admitting this fact in their favour, it must be owned that they all need to begin their education afresh. The same earnest critic who comments upon the primary faults of these artists, notices also some exquisite bits of colouring among their works, but beside these are to be found crude tones and outrages on harmony sufficiently glaring to produce inflammation in sensitive eyes.

The exhibition of 1882 is the seventh which the Indépendants have organised to the honour of Madame Berthe Morisot, and of MM. Caillebotte, Paul Gauguin, Armand Guillaumin, Camille Pissarro, A. Sisley, Pierre-Auguste Renoir, and Victor Vignon.

and dying are lying around we see horses with their entrails torn out, batteries overturned, and heaps of burning ruins ! To look at it is enough to bring on a nightmare

The two young artists, having to treat next a very different subject, that of the serio comic farce known in history as the taking of the Bastille, and bearing in mind that the fortress around which hung so many legends was never defended, have moulded their work accordingly, and have endeavoured to interest the visitor by a number of accessory details arranged in a clever and masterly manner, giving us a picture of Paris and the Parisians of 1789 which is very amusing

With regard to the Battle of Champigny, MM Alphonse de Neuville and Edouard Detaille, who are the two first battle-painters of the day, have treated it with striking power and truth. It is war in its brutal reality, but taxing at the same time all the science and energy of the two painters who have placed themselves long since in the rank of masters, which is theirs by right.

COMPETITION FOR THE PRIZE OF ROME.

THE subject selected this year for competition was the same as that of 1783—a hundred years ago—Mattathias slaying a Jew who had offered sacrifice to idols, from the Book of Maccabees.

The winner, M. G. LOPELIN, son of the well known enamel worker, has been much noticed in preceding Salons for his Slayer of Argus and the Call of Gaspar. He has represented his hero before an altar, brandishing a dagger, he wears a kind of Bedouin turban and is draped in sombre colours. The renegade Jew is dying in agony on one of the steps of the altar, and a soldier in a gleaming breastplate has also been struck down at his feet, whilst all around the angry crowd gesticulate and utter cries of fury.

This work is greatly recommended by its qualities of execution, but is, perhaps, a little cold, a little more freedom and expansion would be welcome from the considerable talents of this young artist.

M. PINET, the artist of the two second prizes, shows Mattathias grasping a massive copper triangle, and the artist has shown considerable vigour in his composition. M. LEROY, the second, executes his work satisfactorily well, but is rather feeble.

By M. Lopelin's side, M. ROCHERESSE has attracted considerable attention, and was strongly supported by a section of the press, who remembered his Death of Isaac. Before a Salon jury he would have tied with the former artist, but the School of Art maintains certain doctrines, and it was evident his audacious and pathetic work would not carry off the prize.

The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian was the subject for sculpture, a subject which has been so frequently treated in every age from the oldest masters down to the present time.

The incident, nevertheless, is better suited to pictorial than statuesque art, but it was doubtless selected on account of the competitors being thereby compelled to render with more or less vigour the idea of physical pain, and mental fidelity to the Faith in spite of martyrdom, and a hope in a divine recompense.

M. FERRARIS was awarded the first prize. His St. Sebastian is quivering with suffering; his agony is that of a martyr whose wounds open as his eyes close, but who is sustained by the thought of the divine reward so nearly within his grasp. He is bound to a tree, his left hand nailed to it by an arrow, whilst another has pierced his right thigh. The two second prizes were carried off by MM. PEPIN and LOMBARD, two promising artists, but whose works presented certain imperfections.

Engraving is a more easily-developed art, inasmuch as its initiative is already in existence. All kinds of this work, both industrial and artistic, abound, but the standard of a first prize not being reached, MM. SULPIS and BARBOTIN received two second prizes.

We shall not apply this verdict to our architects. All in this section was of the very first class, that of the new competitors equally with the works sent from Rome. The theme was a palace for the Council of State, M. PIERRE ESQUIÉ obtained the first prize and goes to Rome, whilst MM. TOURNAIRE and COURTOIS SUFFIT received the two seconds. The plans of the competitors were of the greatest value, and attested a grandeur of vision together with high artistic qualities.

THE FRENCH STUDENTS AT ROME.

THE French School of Painting in Rome has considerably occupied the public mind this year, and has given rise to a question of general interest. The authorities of the Beaux Arts have been called upon to make certain alterations in the rules of the institution, established at the "Villa Medicea," for the furtherance of French Art in Italy. The discussions to which this movement has given rise have intensely interested the artistic world, and have called from the different organs of the Press much animated controversy.

In spite of this, the works sent to us from Rome by our students in that city present no more marked characteristics than heretofore. As usual, they are true to the rules of academical drawing, and we find amongst them some good specimens from the nude, but their efforts are confined within the technical trammels of art, and possess no individuality. The exhibitions on the Quai d'Orléans usually present the same grounds of criticism. The pictures there are of very unequal merit, some indeed hardly reaching mediocrity, and, as a whole, they are surpassed in excellence by the statuary. The sculptors preserve more simplicity in their work, and escape certain unfavourable influences to which the artists more readily succumb. This time the place of honour in the exhibition must be awarded to its architectural specimens, while the engravings sent in hardly deserve mention.

In the section allotted to Painting this year prominence is given to the works of four students of our Roman School, viz Messrs Chartran, Schommer, Bramtot, and Doucet. These young artists possess no small degree of talent, by long study in the different studios they have acquired a dexterity in design and execution which gives to their present productions much promise of future excellence. But, after all it is a question whether a residence in Rome for artistic purposes may not be attended by certain unfavourable results. Perhaps, to live in too close companionship with the works of the great, of old, is not an unmitigated good. Under such circumstances the student is apt to leave the art gallery with a mind full of reminiscences—with visions floating before him, not of what his imagination depicts, but of what he has just seen from the pencil of Luini, of Mantegna, or of some other old master. He is apt to leave the real for the unreal, to go to the works of men for inspiration rather than to Nature herself.

This brings us to the subject of M CHARTRAN'S Vision of Saint Francis of Assisi, which presents many heterogeneous points of detail. The characteristic features of the saint are well preserved, but the work as a composition lacks unity and spirit, while the colouring is heavy and inharmonious. In M BRAMTOT'S picture of Compassion, it is easy to recognise the countenance of an old man who has already figured before in many pictures. M DOUCET'S Hagar is a composition full of defects which strike the eye at first sight, and which suggest youthfulness on the part of the artist. M SCHOMMER, whose maiden production was a picture of Alexander and Bucephalus of somewhat imposing dimensions, has now given us a religious subject, The Resurrection of Lazarus, and treated it in a somewhat sketchy manner. Among specimens of sculpture those most conspicuous are the Decapitation of St Denis by De Fagel, and the Spring by M Cordonnier. This last is a theme of idyllic simplicity, full of classical suggestiveness, and rendered with much grace of manner. The inspiration must have been derived from either Greek or Latin sources. Some of the former exhibitions have shown a tendency to adopt characteristics of the Byzantine school and certain oddities of style. This one, however, gives proof of more singleness of purpose and simplicity of work on the part of the sculptors.

The section devoted to Architecture leaves nothing to be desired. The results there seem to denote real hard work. M. Népot has carried off honours even in Italy, where he lives, and where he is engaged in the erection of the monument to Victor Emmanuel. His sketches after the researches of M. Homolle are held in much esteem, but as labours of restorative art, they cannot be said to very much surpass the Fragments of the Theatre of Marcellus, by M. Giraud; the Temple of Venus, by M. Laloux, and the Old Library of Venice, by M. Blavette.

ANTONY VALABRÈGUE

ART SALES OF THE YEAR.

WE give an indication of the movement in works of Art at the Hôtel Druot, &c. It is well understood that we are unable to mention more than the principal lots in those which attracted the greatest attention. The Hamilton sale in London was the greatest event, in its way, of the century, and the collection came under the hammer in the months of June and July last.

DECEMBER, 1881

SALE OF TWENTY THREE WORKS BY COURBET

Lovers in the Country, £228 — The Wounded Man (bought for the Louvre), £440 — The Man with the Leathern Belt (bought for the Louvre), £1,044 — Courbet's Studio, £840 — The Pretty Dutch woman, £320 — The Siesta during Haymaking time (bought for the Louvre), £1,166 — Stags Fighting (bought for the Louvre), £1,636 — L'Hallali (bought for the Louvre), £1,357 — Return from the Conference, £624 — The Chestnut, £120

33 lots in all, produced £10,076

SALE OF MODERN WORKS

Corot The Goatherd, £188 — Corot Portrait of Mlle. Nils son, £160 — Courbet, The Rocks, £156. — Daubigny, Antwerp Real, £100

THE COLLECTION OF M. TENCÉ.

Rubeis. The Miracle of St. Benoit (purchased for the Musée at Brussels), £6,800.—Jordaens. Huntsman and Dogs (purchased for the Musée at Lille), £444.—P. Potter. Outskirts of the Wood, £347.—Teniers. The Dancers, £280.

THE COLLECTION OF M. DAGNAN.

Chintreuil. Sunset, £120.—Daubigny. The Marsh, £380.—Decamps. A Village Street, £652.—Delacroix. Hercules and Anteus, £204.—Diaz. The Marsh (No. 12), £340.—Diaz. The Marsh (No. 13), £264.—A. de Dreux. The Chief's Horse, £132.—Fromentin. Gazelle-Hunting, £560.—Isabey. A Shipwreck, £280.—Isabey. A Châtelaine, £348.—Th. Rousseau. A Farm in Berry, £1,180.—Troyon. The Horse-pond, £1,004.

• 39 lots in all, produced £8,348. •

[JANUARY, 1882.]

THE COLLECTION OF WORKS OF ART OF THE LATE
M. PAUL DE ST. VICTOR.

Louis XVI. Clock, £16.—A ditto, £28 16s.—A blackwood Cabinet Louis XIII., £21 12s.—Nine small busts of coloured wax, £56.

Total amount realised in the sale, £4,514 2s. •

One only of the pictures in this collection rose above £400. A presumed portrait of a reformer, by François Clouet, called Jehanoet, fell for £336. Amongst the lots realising smaller prices were: Jules Breton. A Reverse, £240.—Weccoix. The Little Shepherdess, £160.—E. Lamy. Henri III. in procession, £140.

FEBRUARY.

THE COLLECTION OF THE DUKE OF BASSANO.

Courbet. The Spring, £141 8s.—Courbet. Winter, £215 4s.—Decamps. A Kennel, £220.—Diaz. A Caring in the Wood, £367 12s.—Géricault. Horses, £86.—Van Goyen, The Meuse at Dordrecht, £170.—Van Goyen. Winter in Holland, £242 16s.—Guardi. Venetian Fête, ½240.

THE COLLECTION OF M FOLLÉ

This collection was divided into two parts—I, a quantity of unimportant works producing £2,292, amongst which the chief was a Portrait of Ingres as a child, by David, knocked down at £268, and II, a collection of works of art which realised £10,332 2s 6d, included in which were a snuff box, £198, a silver vase, by Odier, £158, four silver candlesticks, and an epergne £260, and £484 respectively, a pair of bronze fire dogs of the fourteenth century, £880 a drawing room suite, Louis XV, £524, a series of Louis XV tapestries £400, two Beauvais portières, £396

MARCH

A COLLECTION OF MODERN PAINTINGS

Corot The Fisherman, £140 — Corot The Forest Road, £174 — Courbet The Sea Shore, £140 — Couture The Birdcatcher, £240 — Decamps The Rat retired from the World, £134 — Diaz Lois's Education, £312 — Diaz The Decameron, £170 — Jules Dupré A Stormy Sea, £240 — Pentenhoffen Wallachian Gipsies, £252

APRIL

THE COLLECTION OF M L FLAMENG

Bonington The old Governess, £198 — David Portrait of Barnave, £84 — Fragonard Renaud in the Gardens of Arria (sketch), £364 — Lancret A gallant Assembly, £240

THE COLLECTION OF M A FEBVRE

Francesco Guardi, Piazza San Marco, Pietro San Giorgio Maggiore, Santa Maria della Salute, in one lot, £290 — Hobbema The Country house, £784 — Van der Neer Trilight, £412

WORKS OF ART

An enamel reliquary of the thirteenth century, £324 — An enamel of the Annunciation, £440 — Five enamel plates, by Courtois, £504 — Twelve ditto, by P Raymond, £564 — Enamelled gold box Louis XV, signed Lesueur, £300

We may here mention also the sale of the MSS of Balzac, which terminated by the sale of his bust, by David d'Angers, at £152

THE COLLECTION OF M BENJAMIN FILLOV
MEDALS AND ANTIQUITIES

Bronze mirror, £228 — Ring of Queen Berthilde, wife of Dagobert, £123 4s — Medals struck by Charles VII to commemorate the Expulsion of the English, £340 16s — Medals of Sigismund Pandolfe, Malatesta, £314 — Philibert, Duke of Savoy, £88

An ivory Virgin, 13th century, £520 — Enamel altar piece, £122 — Curved enamel plaque, £114 — Plate by Passaro, £39 8s — Plate by B. Palissy, £40 — Round China Plate, £120

ENGRAVINGS

Marc Duval The Three Brothers Coligny, £60 16s — Goltzius, Henry IV, £12 — Marc Antony Lucrèce, £48 — Rembrandt His own portrait, £19 8s — The piece of 100 florins, £32 — Sergeant Marceau, £11 19s 2d — Copia La Recluse Lepeaux, £12 4s — Lecœur The Ball at the Bastille, £16 0s 10d

PICTURES

German School Girl with a Daisy, £132

DRAWINGS

Van Dyck Antoine Cornelissen, £162 — Ingres M. Gilbert, £36 — Lagneau J P Acirie, £74 8s — Claude Lorraine Land scape, £76

MAY

THE COLLECTION OF MEDALLIONS OF M E. PIOT

Leonello, Marquis of Este, £98 — François de Gonzaga, £125 — Nicolo Piccino, £120 — King Alphonso of Naples, £340 16s — Guirino (a Veronese writer), £294 — Pandolfo Malatesta, £178 — Mathias Cortin, £144 — B d'Este, Duke of Ferrara, £168 — Pope Nicholas V, £120 — Guido Pepoli, £320 — Mahomet II, £313 — Charles Quint (eight in number), £283 4s

This collection was sold in London at Messrs Christie, Manson, and Woods, producing £8 221 4s

JUNE

On the 28th of this month the sale of the second portion of paintings, sketches, studies, and drawings, by the late Gustave Courbet, took place, realising £3 251 4s

PAINTINGS.

The Wrestlers, £232 — Charity to a Beggar at Ornans, £360 — The Stolen Horse, £136 — The Bather (back view), £560 — Huntsman on Horseback seeking the Track, £64 — The Wreck in the Snow, £69 8s — The Calf, £60 16s — The Sorceress, after Frank Hals, £80 — Portrait of Rembrandt, £192 8s — Portrait of M. M . . , £48 8s — The Man in the Helmet, £40 16s — The Rocks of Mouthiers, £106 — Banks of a Lake, £65 4s — Castle of Chillon, £52 16s — Chailly sur Clarcux, £60 16s — The Cedar of Hautepille, £96 4s — The Tooth of Jaman, £64 16s — Sleeping Woman, £80 16s — Young man, seated (lead pencil), £12 16s — Women among the Corn (ditto), £26 8s

THE COLLECTION OF THE COUNT OF —

Drozais Portrait of M^{lle} Lenormand d'Etioilles, £228 — Nicolas Concert in the Park, £200 — Largillière Portrait of the Duchess Montbazou, £128 — L. M. Van Loo Portrait of the Marquise d'Humières, £200 — Mad V. Lebrun Portrait of the Daughter of Sedaine, £364 — Watteau (attributed to) Italian Opera and Comedy (two works), £760.

THE COLLECTION OF M. B.

Troyon Return from Market, £444 — Jules Dupré Sheep returning, £424 4s — Decamps Jews at the Judgment Seat, £410 — Daumier Third Class, £200.

THE HAMILTON SALE.

This sale, certainly, as before remarked, the most important of our century, lasted for seventeen days, divided into five series the first four extending over three days each, and the fifth lasting five days. It realised the gigantic sum of £397,562 os. 6d, or nearly ten millions of francs. Needless to say, it was conducted by the celebrated Christie, Manson, and Woods, of St. James's.

We give in chronological order the dates of the sales, with the most important lots realised.

JUNE 17 — Flemish and Dutch paintings Van Dyck. Henrietta Lotharinga, Duchess of Phalsburgh, £2,100 — Van Huysum. Flowers, £1,228 — Van Dyck. The Duchess of Richmond and her Son, £2,047 — Van Dyck. Equestrian Portrait of Charles I, £997 10s — Rubens Elizabeth Brandt, £1,837 10s — Van de Velde A Calm, £1,365 — Rubens The Birth of Venus, £1,680 — Rubens The Loves of the Centaurs, £2,100 — Hobbema The Water Mill, £4,252 10s — Van Ostade Cabaret, £1,837 10s

JUNE 19 — Chinese and Japanese porcelain, bronzes, lacquer, enamels, crystals, porphyry, busts, tables, and vases Japanese lacquer cabinet, £1,023 — Louis XIV cabinet, £2,310 — Italian coffer, £1,018 — Rock crystal chandelier, £735 — Old porphyry table, £945 — Bust of Augustus in porphyry, with metal ornaments, £1,732 10s

JUNE 20 — Cabinet by Gouthiere, made for Marie Antoinette, £4,620 — Oblong table by Riesener, for the same, £6,000

JUNE 24 — Italian Pictures Giorgione History of Myrrha, £1,417 — Botticelli The Adoration of the Magi, £1,627 — Mantegna Panel, £1,785 — Bronzino Leonora di Toledo, £1,837 — Marcello Venusti Christ clearing the Temple, £1,428 — Marcello Venusti The Adoration of the Magi, £1,218 — Tintoretto An Admiral, £1,155 — Sandro Botticelli The Assumption, £4,777

JUNE 26 — Chinese and Japanese porcelain, old Sèvres, precious objects, and French and Italian furniture — Bust of Napoleon, by Thorwaldsen, £640 10s — Chinese enamelled vase, £472 10s — Mandarin vases, £603 15s. — Louis XV jasper jug, £2,467 — Louis XVI clock, £903

JUNE 27 — Chinese and Japanese porcelain and enamels, silver, furniture, Boule wardrobes, designed by Lebrun, brought from the Louvre, £12,075 — Silver cup, signed Georgen Roemer, 1580, £3,244 10s — Louis XVI candelabra, £2,362 10s

JULY

JULY 1 — Italian Pictures and Historical Portraits Titian. Holy Family, £1,207 10s — Leonardo da Vinci A Laughing Boy, £2,205 — Luca Signorelli The Circumcision, £3 150

JULY 3 — Italian, Dutch, and French china, Venetian and Persian glass, Etruscan pottery, ivories, Italian and French furniture table of the Duke de Choiseul — Bronze group of the Laocoon, £504 — Rock crystal chandelier, £441 — Porphyry bust of Niobe, £409 10s. — Writing table and cartonnère of the Duke de Choiseul, £5,565

JULY 4 — A carved wooden triptych, painted by Raymond, £1,218 — French faience, The Seasons, by Levasseur — Henry

II science, Lamoges enamel open Italian ironwork of the fifteenth century—Hexagonal salt-cellar Henri II, £840

JULY 8—Pictures Dutch, French, Flemish, Spanish, and English schools—Velasquez Philip IV, £6,300—Pantoxa A Council of English and Spanish Statesmen, £2,520

JULY 10—Japanese lacquer—Oriental and Dresden porcelain—Italian and French furniture, and furniture mounted by Gouthière for Marie Antoinette—Louis XVI cabinet by Gouthière, £5,462—Secrétaire by the same, with monogram of Marie Antoinette, £9450—Commode of the same with similar monogram, £9,430

JULY 11—Japanese lacquer—Oriental work and porcelain Statuette of Voltaire, by Houdon, in white marble, £1,050—Jasper rosewater ewer, £850

JULY 15—Miniatures

JULY 17—Sundry curiosities and works of Art—English, German, French, Italian, and Spanish porcelain, pottery, furniture, Gobelins, and other tapestry—Busts of Henri II, Charles IX, Henry III, Catherine de Medicis, Le grand Dauphin, and Mme Claude of France, £1,758—Louis XV commode in marqueterie, £6,247—Bust of Peter the Great, £1,060—Louis XV sofa, very large, £1,176

JULY 18—Small works of art, tapestry, and furniture

JULY 19—English and Dresden porcelain—Small works of Art—Five bronzes after the antique, made for François I, and which ornamented for a long time the chateau of Villerot, £2,551 10s—An oval rock crystal cup, £1,207 10s

JULY 20—Antique jewellery, Renaissance period enamels, engraved stones, and sundry works of Art—An oblong shaped casket of black buhl and companion, £498 15s

THE SALON AT ANTWERP.

ANTWERP shares triennially with Brussels and Gand its turn of an exhibition of Fine Art, which this year was held in the first-named city. The Salon of 1882 was warmly criticised by the public and the press, as it was considered inferior to its predecessors and more mediocre in character, and it was generally agreed that the fault lay with the jury, who had exercised too great leniency in accepting the works sent in for exhibition.

Nevertheless there were many remarkable works to be distinguished amidst the ordinary mass. The French and German artists formed, amongst the strangers, a considerable contingent. The Last moments of the Emperor Maximilian, by JEAN PAUL LAURENS, did not obtain, in spite of his great talent, the success doubtless expected. A fine portrait by M. Fantin Latour was more liked, and one by Madame Roth, a pupil of Alfred Stevens, met with still greater approbation, and was justly honoured with a medal by the jury. The Smith's Strike, by M. SOYER, was much noticed, and M. MANET, with his Bar at the Folies Bergere, caused, as he always does, lively admiration from his friends and passionate criticism from the rest. M. BEAUVERIE showed a landscape of delightful colourisation.

The family scenes by VAUTIER and BORELMAN, always so full of observation, and the fantastic violence of M. GUSOW's tones, may be considered as the cream of the German section. Our familiar friends, the Dutch, shone with their accustomed brilliancy in the fine qualities of MAUVE and MESDAG, while the latest new-comer at Antwerp made his first appearance with the picture previously exhibited at Paris, A Military Funeral in Holland

The Belgians, being in their own house, naturally took up most room. In the front row was seen M HENRI DL BRAEKELEER, with a Flemish interior of a public house, the Pilots' Arms, possessing an intensity of colour and an admirable strength of light. This artist, so full of the old traditions of national style, and yet of the greatest originality, has at last seen justice done to him after having so long been disdained and unrecognised, even by his countrymen, and now it has arrived the verdict is unanimous. It is more and more towards this strong and healthy interpretation of real life that our aspirations tend. Whilst a respectful homage was paid to those who, like M. N. de Keyser, have struggled before and continue to do so still, whilst others almost celebrated, like M. Verlat, failed to rise to their previous reputation, or like M. Slingeneyer, who had the feebleness to display works he would have done better to retain at home—the public saluted with its applause and sympathy new and ardent artists full of a truer and less conventional style, M. MEUNIER and his interesting studies of mines and smithies, M. SACRÉ and his curious attempt at a workman's drama, and the landscape painters, Heymans, de Knyff Rosseels, and Coosemans—amongst whom the first named attracted most attention, and has become in some sort a kind of leader of a school of landscape painters—who have perhaps some exaggerations, but nevertheless study nature with widely opened eyes to the infinite clearness of light, and produce by those means an accent of great tenderness and considerable fineness. Each of their works was well studied and carefully discussed.

By the side of these already renowned artists a battalion of younger men have entered the lists, and the Antwerp Salon has allowed them to show themselves. The Dutch Village of M. COURTENS, rewarded at the Paris Salon, was perhaps, with Underwood in Campine, of M. VERSTRAETE, the best, but in both, the interpretation of nature was increased by an exquisite feeling and a penetrating charm. In figure painting, M. FRÉDÉRIC's Chalk Merchants showed rare cleverness and great suppleness in its scientific drawing, besides feeling and colour, possibly inspired by the works of Bastien Lepage, in which may be seen great promise. Equal hopes were nourished by the interiors and portraits by the young artists Lalang, F. Charlet, Van Rysselberghe, and de Jans.

•We fall back lastly on pictures of the very first class in the animals of Alfred Verwée and Stobbaerts, and the household studies of Jan van Beers and Verhaert, the former Parisianised, the latter thoroughly Flemish both in colour and subject, and not forgetting a bouquet of ladies not the least appreciated in the salon, particularly Mesdames d'Anethan and Meumer, two pupils of Alfred Stevens, like Madame Roth

Very little in sculpture. A few busts, signed by Rodin, De Vigne, and Dillens, were all worthy of regard. And in water colour, that charming medium so highly cultivated in Belgium, there would positively have been nothing to note had not M. Stacquet shown some pretty landscapes both lively and clever.

LUCIEN SOLVAY.

VIENNA INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF FINE ARTS.

THIS Exhibition, which opened on the 1st of April and closed on the 15th October, was the first of a series of periodical exhibitions which the Association of Viennese Artists intends to hold every four years. The idea was first laid before the Emperor at a meeting of the Association Committee and the governing body of the Academy of Fine Arts in 1880. The Viennese artists recognised the necessity of throwing local talent into relief by encouraging emulation in a systematic manner. Their scheme, having received the approbation of the Government, appealed to the sympathy of the enlightened Viennese, and was quickly carried into effect. The Municipal Council voted the sum of 10,000 florins towards the object in view, Herr Ottokar Weber, Director of the Discount Bank of Bohemia, added 3,000 florins, Baron Albert de Rothschild opened in its favour a credit of 100,000 florins free of interest, and in a few months' time a guaranteed fund of 200,000 florins (about £16,800), made up of voluntary subscriptions, placed the Society in a position to embark upon its project, under the direction of a committee composed of thirteen "protectors" (court personages and leading financiers), and twenty five artists, members of Parliament, art critics, and heads of industrial enterprises. His Excellency Count Edmond Zichy was elected president, and Herr Nic Dumba, Member of Parlia ment, Herr Makart, artist, Herr Streit, architect, and Herr von Angeli, artist, were appointed vice presidents

One of the first resolutions passed by the Committee settled the international character of these exhibitions by inviting every nation to participate in them. The invitations to the foreign countries was communicated through the diplomatic body, and a prompt and cordial response was received from all, with few exceptions, including Russia and England. Germany, Belgium, Spain, and especially France, contributed more objects of artistic interest than had been solicited. It was not without difficulty—and even sacrifice—that room was found for all these paintings in the Künstler Haus, notwithstanding the extension of the premises which had been carried out under the direction of the architect, Herr Streit. France and Germany alone could easily find sufficient space for the large paintings, and the examples of decorative, historic, and monumental art, they had contributed, to the two magnificent rooms with galleries, seven metres high, which had been reserved to these Powers in the annexes.

In the Austrian section, a kind of hesitation was observable between a somewhat narrow imitation of the old methods and the influence of French naturalism. HERR MAKART, chief of the Decorative school, was unfortunately represented only by a slender exhibition of his works. A study of Cleopatra, nude to the waist, dying amidst a mass of jewels and precious stones, and some portraits, costumed in the taste of the Renaissance, were nevertheless sufficient to throw into relief the richness of his style. The three portraits by HERR CAXON, to which the influence of Titian, Holbein and Van Dyck was revealed in turn, displayed a singular gift of reflecting the old masters, a patient investigation of their methods, and an unequalled manual dexterity. In the portrait of a young woman, painted with delicate art, HERR VON ANGELI appears to have given evidence of a more refined sensibility. About the works of these artists are ranged those of a large number of genre and landscape painters, masters of composition, ingenious draughtsmen, and powerful colourists, all conveying a certain sense of highly wrought pleasure. Here and there, however, might be traced signs of a revolt against this somewhat cold aestheticism, notably in the efforts of FAULEN TRIN BLAL, the eminent landscape painter, which attracted much attention by their freshness and freedom.

Whether it be from natural vivacity of temperament, or the lack of education founded on traditions, the Hungarian painters showed in their section a larger amount of independence and at the same time of inequality. Without mentioning Herr Munkacsy, a certain number of young men who have studied in Paris expressed in their representations of local types a sincerity which, although sometimes maladroit, bespoke originality and energy. It appears probable that patient cultivation of the talent displayed by these Eastern artists will lead before long to interesting results.

France has in fact, already benefited by this movement. M. BAUDRY'S large ceiling for the Cour de Cassation, the Triumph of the La M. BOUGUEREAU'S Virgin, Consolatrice and his Birth of Venus. M. HENRI LEVY'S Jesus in the Tomb. M. ROLL'S Miners' Strike, M. FLAMENG'S Girondins and other paintings by Messrs. Cormon, Maignan, Dupain, &c., proved that true art had nothing to fear from the daily progress of that familiar school of painting so brilliantly represented by Messrs. Bastien-Lepage, Dantan, Benjamin Constant, J. L. Brown, &c., while the art of portraiture received from the pencils of Messrs. Bonnat, J. Lefebvre, Henner, and Paul Dubois an incomparable impression of freedom and simplicity.

Some beautiful marbles—M. FALGUIERE'S Corneille, M. VILLAR'S Alcestis Farewell, M. SCHIENWERT'S Morning, M. DE SAINT MARCEAU'S Genius keeping the Secret of Death, and M. GUILAUME'S Anacreon, placed in the middle of the large French room helped to convey to it a contemplative suggestiveness very imposing to the spectator.

Germany brought much more luxury to bear on the decoration of her large room. An immense dais of red velvet, with deep falling draperies, formed in the midst a sort of dimly lighted chamber comfortably furnished with seats, from which could be seen in a brilliant light the paintings arranged against the wall. Tall plants in vases occupied the angles around the statues. So ingenious an arrangement could only be suitable to small paintings, and it is in fact in their portraits and genre subjects that the artists of Munich, Dusseldorf, and Berlin have shown their inconceivable ability, founded nearly always in the patient study of the old masters rather than the immediate study of nature.

The refined dilettantism of Herr Lenbach and Herr Kaulbach compels admiration more than ever in several careful studies and fine portraits. Moreover, a serious endeavour to convey greater

In fine, the success attained by the first International Exhibition of Vienna has been such that the Association of Viennese Artists are already thinking of its successor in 1886. These exhibitions, alternating with those which will take place at Munich every four years, will furnish Germany with abundant opportunity for measuring her own strength with that of foreign nations, aided by the guarantees supplied by an international jury. At the Vienna Exhibition thirty large medals were awarded. Of these, eight went to France, who alone of all nations was adjudged worthy to receive one for each branch of art—viz. historical painting, landscape, sculpture, engraving in medals, plate engraving, and architecture.

H. SCHWARZ

ART IN RUSSIA.

THE MOSCOW EXHIBITION.

LITTLE is known of the history of Russian art outside of Russia. It will not, therefore, be out of place to convey some notion of it before speaking of the great Artistic and Industrial Exhibition of Moscow, whose mission was to present, in a concise form, the progress achieved by the Fine and Industrial Arts in Russia during the quarter of a century (1855-80) embraced by the reign of the Emperor Alexander II.

If we pass in review all the works of Ancient Russian art commencing with the tenth century and concluding with the seventeenth, we recognise everywhere traces of a peculiar originality both in form and ornamentation, notwithstanding the influence of foreign masters—the Byzantines in the eleventh century, the Italians in the fifteenth, and the Dutch in the seventeenth. It was only in the eighteenth century, after the arrival in Russia of a large number of French artists at the invitation of Peter the Great and Catherine II, and the despatch to France of young Russian artists who had passed through the St. Petersburg Academy of Fine Arts, that Russian art fell under foreign influence. The movement lasted until the middle of the nineteenth century. After the Crimean War the national sentiment began to revive in Russian society and a realistic tendency was observable at the same time with regard to art. Some years previously a similar movement made its appearance in Literature with the dramatist Pribnédoff, the poets Ponschkine and Lermontoff, the fabulist Kryloff, and Gogol the novelist. It was not felt in relation to art until some thirty years later.

CHARLES BRULOFF, painter of the famous picture, the Last Days of Pompeii (1835), may be considered the final representative of classic traditions and Russian art. Some of his pupils showed greater independence, as, for instance, MOLLEI, in his works, A Kiss, A Bride, and the Roussalka (1842). A contemporary of Bruloff, ALEXANDER IVANOFF, who passed all his life in Italy painting a single picture, Christ's Appearance to the People (1840-58), and making biblical sketches in which he consistently adhered to historic truth, already perceived that the time had arrived for Russian art to enter upon a new phase, but his own tastes kept him within the limits of scriptural subjects.

The genre artist, VENETZIANOFF, is generally regarded as the father of the new school of Russian painting. After having seen Granet's picture at the Imperial Hermitage, he was the first to select for his subjects scenes of peasant life, and to enter upon the careful study of nature, as is evidenced by his Interior of the Capucin Monastery at Rome (1818). Venetziannoff was surrounded by a group of disciples who followed his example. Nevertheless, in the works of all these artists were wanting a certain feeling for nature and that expression of humour so characteristic of the Russian realistic school of to-day.

When Venetziannoff painted from nature his first picture, the Grange (1820), he found himself, as his memories inform us, sorely troubled to express the sentiment which the work demanded. It would be, therefore, more just to recognise as the founder of the new Russian school the painter FEDOTOFF, who, under the influence of the famous fabulist, Kryloff, began to depict contemporary life, and who exhibited in 1849 three genre subjects: A Cavalier just intitled with the Insignia of his Order, Entangling a Mayor in Marriage and A Lady difficult to please in the Choice of a Husband.

In reality, the national and naturalistic impulse in Russian Art chiefly shows itself in the pupils of the Moscow School of Painting and Sculpture. This school gave us, about the year 1840, quite a constellation of young genre and landscape painters, treating only subjects of a national character, as, for instance, Easter Sunday in a Russian Family, the Nuptial Benediction, and a Soldier's Narrative. To this category belong the following painters, who have played a more or less important part in the history of Russian art since 1855: PEROFF, POUKIREFF, NEVREFF, PRIBLOFF, RATCHLOFF, PRIANICHNIKOFF, V. MAKOVSKI, SAVRASSOFF, KAMENEFF, and others. Almost at the same period realists made their appearance among the pupils of the St. Petersburg Academy of Fine Arts. Some painted subjects inspired by modern life, among whom may be mentioned, Tchernyschff, the brothers P. and A. Rizzoni, A. Popoff, Baron M. P. Klodt, A. Volkoff, Troustovski, J. Sokoloff, Jacoby, N. Petroff, Maïassorédoff, Morozoff, Korzoukhine, Koscheleff, Jouravleff, Sédoff, Pevine, Lemoch, Maximoff, Répine, Savitsky, Vasnetzoff, B. V. Vereschaguine, Dmitrieff (of Orenburg), C. Makovski, &c. Others sought their subjects in bygone phases of life, and among these artists may be named Schwarz, Litovtchenko, Gue, and Sourikoff. Some portrait painters, like Kœnler, Kramskoi, and some landscape painters of Russian scenery, such as the Baron M. C. Klodt, Mestchersky, Schuschline, Vassilieff, Volkoff, Orlovsky, Koumdji, and Klever, also attracted notice.

Quite a new movement among Russian artists commenced about the year 1863. It was then that Péroff, sent to France at the expense of the Academy, requested to be allowed to return to Russia before the stated time. He felt that he was unequal to the task of representing subjects reflecting the life of a foreign people, and he preferred to study the habits and customs of his native land. At the same time several pupils of the Academy—Kramskoi, Lemoch, Litovtchenko, C. Makowski, S. Gringaneff, Dmitrieff (of Orenburg), Jouravleff, Korzoukhine, Morozoff, Peskoff, Schoustoff, B. Weng, and Kreytan, refused to follow the directions of the Professors in the competition for the Grand Gold Medal, on the ground that the subjects indicated were at variance with the natural bent of their minds. These revolutionaries separated from the Academy and formed a Free Association. In 1871 some of their number organised an Exhibiting Society, with the view of exhibiting their works, not only to the inhabitants of the capital but also to their countrymen in the provinces. The initiative of this society is due to the painter Maïassorédoff, who, on his return from Spain, where he had been a student of the Academy, showed his project to the members of the Association, and afterwards to some artists of Moscow, such as Peroff, Prian ischnikoff, Savrassoff. To-day this society already counts thirty members, among whom are found some eminent artists. They have already had ten annual exhibitions, and their works have been shown in all the principal cities of Russia. Since then, the artists who belong to the Academy have also formed an Organising Society of artistic exhibitions. This last society has twice as many members as the other, but they are free and often change, again, the six annual exhibitions of the new society have not been so rich in national subjects as the old one, and it is principally the landscapes here that have attracted attention.

There are very few artists unconnected with these two societies. At the head of them we must place B. V. Vereschaguine, so well known by his subjects drawn from the Taschivent (1867-68) and Bulgarian wars (1877-78), also from his brilliant studies brought from India. He alone has made quite a revolution in public opinion, for no one before him had treated scenes of war with such reality and sentiment, besides, no artist possesses such rapidity of execution. At the present time a private exhibition of his works is making the tour of Europe, and excites great admiration every where.

It is otherwise with sculpture. After Pimenoff and Baron P. Klodt, who have distinguished themselves as realistic sculptors, the first of whom produced, about the year 1855, the monuments of Kriloff and Nicholas I, we meet with no more sculptors of this class before Antokolski, who showed what he was capable of doing ten years ago by his statues of John the Terrible and Peter I. It is true that the painter Mikéschine has constructed, during this time, the monument commemorative of the millennium of Russia (1862), and that of Catherine II (1813), but these works represent a collective labour, for the artist was not himself a sculptor, and other artists (Tchijoff, Opécouschine, &c.) executed these works after his designs. Among the productions of the new Russian sculptors, such as Kamenski, Tchijoff, Popoff, Laveretzi, who have taken subjects drawn from modern life, we remark less of reality than in the productions of the new painters of the same class. It is the academical traditions that dominate them. There has arisen, on the other hand, quite a school of sculptors who have produced, in wax and bronze, little groups of men and animals with great truthfulness, they are Lieberich Von Wahl, Menert, Lanceray, Ober, Posen, Schokhune, &c.

Later we see arise the national architecture. C Thon, the artist who was looked upon as the father of this architecture, constructed his churches only in the Byzantine style. The really national feeling begins only with the appearance of the two Gornostaeffs (uncle and nephew), Rezanoff and Grimm, Schorter and Huhn, Hartmann and Ropett, Bogomoloff and Wallberich, &c. During these last twenty five years, other good architects of the same period, Beine and Benois, Bernhardt and Bohnstedt, Krakau and Rachau, have designed edifices in foreign styles.

With the regeneration of national art in Russia coincides the formation of many private collections especially devoted to productions of the new Russian School, as those of Soldatenkoff and Tretiakoff. Nearly all these collections are at Moscow. The official collections, like that of the Imperial Hermitage of the National Museum of Moscow (formerly the collection of Prianishnikoff), and of the Academy of Fine Arts of St Petersburg, remain, on the contrary, mostly devoted to the productions of the old Russian school. Many works drawn from these collections appeared in the Universal Exhibition of London (1862), Paris (1867 and 1873), and of Vienna (1873).

This year, besides the annual exhibitions of the two artistic societies, and the private exhibitions of some artists, as those of Aivazovski, Klever, Soudkovski, Kouindji, Soukhorovski, there has been a great national exhibition at Moscow. Unfortunately it has not been able to show a complete picture of the Russian national art during the last quarter of a century, some collectors having refused to lend the works belonging to them. Thus we cannot see the greater part of the productions that have appeared at the exhibitions of the last ten years, so characteristic of the progress of the new school. The artists best represented have still been the painters of religious subjects, as Ivanoff, B P Vereschaguine, Botkine, the painters of foreign subjects (drawn from the French, Italian, or Roman life), as Huhn, Bronnikoff, Siémiradzki, the battle painters, as Willewalde, Kotzebue, Kovalerski, the landscape painters, as Aivazovski, Bogoluboff, Soudkovski, Klever, the portrait painters, as Koehler, C Makovski, the sculptors, as Antokolski, Lanceray, Bock, Laveretzi, Podozeroff, and M Popoff, the copper plate engravers, as Jordan and Pojalostine, the etchers, as V Bobroff, and Dmitneff (called the Caucasian). Then follow the architects, and lastly the Finnish artists.

In general, the great exhibition of Moscow, this year, has been very rich in pictures, sculptures, and architectural designs. As I have published, in French and Russian, an illustrated catalogue of this exhibition, in which those who interest themselves in Russian art will be able to find more extended information, I have dispensed with citing here the titles of all the important works that have figured in this exhibition.

N SOBKO

[N.B.—The public indulgence is requested for the hiatus in the following pagination.—E.D.]

EXPOSITION
DE
L'UNION CENTRALE DES ARTS DECORATIFS
—
ŒUVRES ET PRODUITS MODERNES
—

BING

19, rue Chauchat, 19

BING

ce nom incisif et pénétrant n'a-t-il pas pour vos oreilles la sonorité cuivrée et retentissante du gong chinois frappé par une baguette vigoureuse? Pour moi, cette simple syllabe bien prononcée, « Bing! » évoque dans mon esprit toutes sortes de visions et de féeries orientales. Je rêve, en l'entendant, d'étoffes superbes et de meubles bizarres, de soieries larmées d'or et d'argent, de bronzes aux nielles délicats, d'idoles pansues et ventruës, et d'oiseaux fantastiques, montés sur des échasses roses, étincelant des topazes, des émeraudes et des rubis tombés sur leurs ailes de l'écrin vivant de la nature, et ce rêve est une réalité!

M. Bing, en effet, a été, et il est encore aujourd'hui le premier importateur en France de ces curiosités et de ces merveilles de l'extrême Orient dont toute l'Europe se montre si friande aujourd'hui.

Je me sens incapable de rendre avec la plume l'impression que j'éprouve en pénétrant dans l'admirable salle dont

THE COLLECTION OF M S BING
C. p. or root C. p. furcata g. 105

la décoration a été confiée à M. Bing. C'est comme un éblouissement.

Je débute dans la section des meubles, et je me vois tout de suite entouré de dix ou douze cabinets en bois de fer, divisés en compartiments ingénieux, et rehaussés de fins décors de nacre, d'ivoire, de jade, d'or ou d'argent, qui jettent comme un éclair de gaieté sur la sévérité du fond. Mille objets aux formes nouvelles nous montrent leur incrustation brillante, les bois nuagés d'or nous caressent doucement la rutine, plus loin ce sont des figurines toutes radieuses, qui se détachent sur des fonds de laque noire, des harnachements de chevaux nous étonnent par la vivacité et la fraîcheur de leurs colorations, nous admirons sur des paravents aux feuilles mobiles des figures ou grotesques ou terribles, mais dont l'expression, poussée à outrance, atteint les dernières limites du possible.

Les sévérités du programme de l'Union centrale ne permettraient pas à M. Bing d'exposer sa merveilleuse collection de vases de Chine et du Japon. Il n'a pu nous en montrer que quelques échantillons, assez pour nous charmer et nous séduire par la pureté des lignes, la grace des proportions et la recherche heureuse des tonalités. De grandes tables cloisonnées nous disent le dernier mot de la magnificence orientale, tandis que des boîtes, des plateaux, des écrans, et tous les petits meubles de la vie intime de la Chine et du Japon nous surprennent, nous amusent et nous captivent par les détails les plus ingénieux et les plus inattendus.

Des tableaux, des dessins, des soieries, des manuscrits, enrichis de tous les trésors de la calligraphie orientale, retiennent aussi bien longtemps les amateurs, les uns épris de l'idéal pureté de certains types, les autres se désolant la rate devant certaines charges spirituelles ou narquoises.

Mais son véritable triomphe, c'est avec les étoffes que M. Bing vient de l'obtenir. Il en a de splendides, et il en a d'exquises. La palette des plus grands coloristes est vaincue, et humiliée par un ton d'aurore ou de soleil couchant, par ces gris perle pâissants, par ces teintes opalines, par ces lueurs argentées, par ces lilas glacés et changeants, par ces rayonnements de l'or et ces chatoyements des pierreries que rendent à miracle ces tissus incomparables.

MAISON KRIEGER

A DAMON ET C^{IE}, SUCCESSEURS

74, Faubourg Saint-Antoine

LA MAISON KRIEGER tient depuis longtemps le sceptre de la fabrication du meuble français, et ce sceptre n'est pas tombé en passant dans les mains de M. A. DAMON et de ses associés, chefs actuels de cet établissement de premier ordre.

La maison Damon est universelle, et vous pouvez lui demander avec la même confiance et le Moyen-Âge et la Renaissance, sans parler du style moderne, qui le reconnaît comme l'un de ses maîtres.

C'est dans ses ateliers et ses magasins qu'il faut chercher la maison Krieger. L'exposition de l'Union Centrale ne contient point M. Damon tout entier. Elle ne le montre que par fragments, par échantillons et par spécimens. C'est beaucoup sans doute, ce n'est point encore assez !

On peut diviser son envoi en quatre sections dont chacune mérite une attention spéciale et une étude particulière. C'est d'abord une salle à manger du xv^e siècle (dont nous donnons la reproduction), avec sa haute cheminée monumentale, montant presque jusqu'au plafond. Au milieu du manteau, une tablette protégée par un rebord ajouré, reçoit une garniture de faïences : plats, brocs et hanaps d'un bel effet décoratif, les sièges, travaillés dans le bois plein, ont des dossiers évidés qui rappellent les fenêtres à compartiments des vieilles cathédrales, la table à pans coupés, se rétrécissant ou s'allongeant à volonté, nous montre, entre ses pieds robustes, de petites balustrades finement ouvragues Les deux buifets, qui se font face, de chaque côté de la salle, avec toilette pouvant remplir l'office de dressoir, sont d'un travail achevé. J'en pourrai dire autant des deux grands fauteuils surmontés d'un dais qui accostent la cheminée, et des deux portes conduisant à la salle à manger, dans le hall du château, très élégantes avec leurs ogives qui s'infléchissent de façon à former une accolade pleine de grace.

A côté de ces œuvres de style, la maison Krieger fait les concessions nécessaires aux exigences modernes, en exposant le mobilier de deux chambres, dans les prix doux, vrai mobilier de bord de mer ou de campagne de la banlieue parisienne, l'un en sapin ordinaire, sans sculpture d'aucune sorte, mais d'une ligne très nette et très pure, l'autre en pitch pin d'Amérique, plus relevé de ton, avec des découpures élégantes. Le tout abordable aux petites bourses puisque l'on a, pour 3,600 fr., neuf pièces importantes, un lit, une commode, une armoire à glace, une toilette, une table de nuit, une table ordinaire, un fauteuil et deux chaises, ainsi que les tentures et les rideaux.

Au premier étage dans la salle spéciale destinée aux meubles somptueux déjà primés dans de précédentes expositions, on peut admirer encore une magnifique bibliothèque à deux corps du xvi^e siècle, en noyer naturel, sculptée, avec fronton couronné par la statue, d'une si fière tournure, du silencieux Laurent de Médicis — chef d'œuvre de Michel-Ange. Sur l'armoirette centrale, à vantaux pleins, de très fines arabesques accompagnent des médaillons d'un beau style reproduisant deux profils de femmes coiffées et vêtues à la mode de Henri II. Le meuble composite mêle dans son décor le Corinthien à l'Ionien. On prend le beau partout où on le trouve. Ce meuble est un des plus complets que j'aie rencontrés dans cette salle, et il méritait à tous égards d'être décrit ici.

EBENISTERIE D'ART

FLACHAT, COCHET & C^{ie}

• 4, rue Dunon, Lyon

l'Exposition de l'UNION CENTRALE prise dans sa généralité et son ensemble accuse une prédominance marquée de l'élément parisien, il ne faut pas croire cependant, que la main de Paris soit seule à figurer dans ce concours ouvert à l'industrie artistique sans exception aucune de provenance et d'origine

C'est ainsi que la seconde ville, Lyon, s'y trouve glorieusement représentée par deux maîtres ébénistes, dont la fraternelle association enfante de véritables chefs d'œuvre

Leur exposition a grand air, et l'amateur des belles œuvres du ciseau étudie avec un réel plaisir et le grand buffet-dressoir, de proportions grandioses, qui occupe le centre de leur montre, et la Credence Cabinet, dans le style Henri II, reproduite par notre dessin, et la vitrine Louis XIV, en bois de noyer, rehaussée de dorures. Nous voudrions faire connaître, ces trois objets, tout à fait remarquables, et qui placent hors de pair MM Flachat et Cochet. Cette importante maison, qui s'efforce de continuer l'école lyonnaise, a donné là une preuve de sa puissante originalité.

Le grand dressoir est à deux corps. Sa partie inférieure a pour principal décor des fleurs et des fruits, le second corps y ajoute quatre cariatides, qui supportent l'entablement, d'un beau caractère.

Fort élégante dans l'ensemble de son galbe, la credence cabinet, nous montre ses deux corps très harmonieusement reliés. La partie supérieure, naturellement la plus ornée,

Credence Cabinet, style Henri II, executé par MM Flachet, Cochet & Co.

est justement fière des délicieuses plaques de porcelaine très élégamment intercalées dans ses portes

Je passe légèrement, ne pouvant tout dire, sur une aimable variété de consoles en bois doré, et de fort beaux miroirs dans le style de la Renaissance, de Louis XIV et de Louis XVI — Il y a là des choses magnifiques, il y en a d'autres d'une simplicité charmante

S'il me fallait préciser d'un mot la caractéristique de la fabrication de MM Flachat et Cochet, je louerais surtout chez eux ce mélange d'imagination et d'assimilation qui leur permet d'interpréter à leur gré, et avec un égal succès, les styles les plus divers et les plus opposés, et, quand il leur plaît, de devenir eux mêmes créateurs, sans jamais tomber dans la reproduction servile des anciens meubles

La mise hors concours, — c'est-à-dire la plus haute des distinctions dont le jury dispose, — dit assez dans quelle estime sont tenues les œuvres de cette maison de premier ordre. Lyon, a le droit d'être fier de se voir représenté, dans une industrie considérée comme essentiellement parisienne, par deux hommes que la supériorité incontestée de leurs produits a placés d'emblée au premier rang

JULIEN SIMON

MAISON GALLAIS

77, boulevard Richard-Lenoir

JULIEN SIMON, successeur d'un industriel éminent, M GALLAIS, et directeur de la grande fabrique du boulevard Richard Lenoir, 77, qui porte encore ce nom justement honore, s'est voué à la fabrication des meubles de grand luxe. Main habile au service d'une intelligence cultivée, M Simon excelle à nous rendre les époques disparues, dont il reproduit les plus belles inspirations, en leur donnant un caractère personnel qui constitue le mérite, la saveur et le charme des œuvres originales Exposition de la Maison Gallais.

Lit Louis XV en laque Martin.

C'est que M. Simon est un homme de son siècle. Aussi nous a-t-il prouvé qu'avec une étude approfondie des modèles, et en se pénétrant du goût de nos ancêtres, on pouvait arriver à des créations appropriées à nos usages, en harmonie avec nos intérieurs, et capables de satisfaire à tous nos besoins, en donnant cependant à nos yeux les mêmes jouissances que les œuvres mêmes des vieux maîtres, qu'ils s'appellent Boule ou Riesner, Gouthière ou Ducerceau.

Aux yeux de beaucoup de gens, M. Julien Simon a un titre, c'est celui de restaurateur et de vulgarisateur parmi nous de ce procédé de peinture connu sous le nom de VERNIS MARTIN, dont les grands artistes industriels du siècle de Louis XV et de M^{me} de Pompadour ont su tirer un si merveilleux parti.

Il suffira, pour s'en convaincre, de jeter les yeux sur le beau lit Louis XV et sur l'élégante armoire de la même époque, ornés l'un et l'autre de charmantes peintures genre Watteau, d'une facture à la fois exquise et originale. Initié depuis longtemps aux mystères de la fabrication des laques, M. Julien Simon nous offre moins des spécimens exquis de ce qu'il peut produire dans ce genre de meubles, qui est appelé à faire l'ornement et la joie des plus somptueuses demeures aussi bien que des intérieurs les plus artistiques.

Il ne faut pas croire, cependant, que cet admirable type des peintures laquées absorbe complètement le temps, le talent et l'énergie de l'artiste contemporain. Un eclectisme large et intelligent est le seul mot d'ordre auquel il obéisse. Nous n'étonnons donc personne en disant qu'il tente au besoin de fructueuses excursions dans le monde gothique et parmi les grands producteurs de la Renaissance.

Nous n'avons pas encore signalé un ameublement dans le goût de la Renaissance anglaise. Cette composition si charmante dans son ensemble, et si intéressante dans ses détails, emploie comme élément principal le noyer ciré — une matière superbe — et comme ornement, des panneaux de laque intercalés dans le bois, à l'instar des plaques de faïence, que traitaient de la même façon les ébénistes de la Renaissance. Cette pièce, unique dans son genre, suffirait à la gloire d'un artiste industriel. Elle mettra le sceau à la juste renommée de M. Julien Simon.

ANCIENNE MAISON BEFORT AINE

ZWIENER

ÉBENISTERIE DE MEUBLES D'ART

2, rue de la Roquette

ne m'étonnerait point si l'on me disait que M. Zwiener rêve chaque nuit de Versailles et des Trianon. Il doit être hanté par les ombres de Gouthière et de Riesner. J'imagine que l'élégante silhouette de la reine passe souvent devant ses yeux, pleine de grâce et de majesté.

Ce sont, en effet, les chefs-d'œuvre de cette époque, d'une si rare et si parfaite élégance, que ce jeune maître aime surtout à reproduire. Je me hâte d'ajouter qu'il y réussit à souhait. La commode de Marie-Antoinette, reproduite par ce véritable artiste, est d'une telle perfection qu'on pourrait la faire monter du rez de chaussée au premier étage placée à côté de l'original même, dans les galeries de l'exposition rétrospective, elle embarrasserait les connaisseurs qui pourraient bien hésiter entre l'œuvre de Riesner et la sienne. Imiter ainsi, c'est créer. Les cuivres de ce beau meuble sont d'une ciselure vraiment irréprochable.

J'en pourrais dire autant de deux autres reproductions, non moins bien réussies. L'une du joli bureau du ministère de la marine, et l'autre de la commode de Mazarin. La encore, M. Zwiener n'a pas craint de lutter avec Boule, et il a grandi dans cette lutte, les reproductions de M. Zwiener mériteraient aussi d'être placées dans un musée. Nous les y verrons quelque jour.

Mais je me hâte d'arriver aux créations propres à cet éminent artiste industriel. Les deux premières sont deux fort beaux meubles, style Louis XV en vernis-Martin avec des cuivres ciselés d'une grande correction et d'un dessin fort ingénieux. Des deux peintures qui décorent ces pièces magni-

*Cabinet Louis XV avec cuivres ciselés
exécutés par M. Zwinger*

fiques, l'une représente la jeune déesse des fleurs, parée des plus beaux produits de son empire, l'autre, dont nous donnons ci-dessus la reproduction, représente Vulcain et Venus, couple divin, mais mal assorti. Le jury a reconnu le mérite de cet heureux débutant en lui décernant la médaille d'or.

LECORNEY ET C^{ie}, EDITEURS

TERRES CUITES, BRONZES & MARBRES

4^{bis}, rue Pierre-Levée

NICOLAS LECORNEY, le fondateur de cette importante industrie d'art, est avant tout un artiste. Il vint de bonne heure à Paris et suivit les excellentes leçons de Lequeux, puis il se mit à travailler pour l'industrie, à exécuter des ornements pour meubles, bronzes, etc., il réussit à se créer assez vite par son habileté, par la fertilité de ses inventions décoratives, une réputation spéciale et fort légitime. Modelant les figures avec une rapidité surprenante et douée naturellement de cette sorte de qualité qu'on n'acquiert point à l'École des Beaux-Arts, et qui consiste à subordonner ses compositions aux formes architecturales qu'elles sont appelées à décorer, à sacrifier avec goût le pittoresque du détail à l'harmonie de l'ensemble, il se forma une clientèle qui se disputait bientôt ses œuvres. C'est alors, en 1876, que M. LECORNEY fonda une maison commerciale pour l'exploitation de ses moules de sculpture, elle eut un grand succès. Ce sont surtout les grâces de l'enfance qu'il excelle à exprimer, et les sujets qu'il a exécutés dans ce genre tels que le Premier Livre, la Première Gamme, etc., sont devenus populaires. En 1880, il fit admettre au Salon deux statues : l'Enfant au baiser (dont nous donnons ici la reproduction), et la Première montre, encouragé par son succès, il exposa, en 1881, une Jeune Fille, et enfin, à notre dernier Salon, une Queteuse.

On peut juger, par ce gracieux spécimen, du talent de cet artiste, qui appartient plutôt à l'Art qu'au commerce; l'argile fouillée par lui exprime tous les sentiments humains, ainsi qu'il est facile de le constater en examinant sa belle et riche collection de Terres cuites.

A force de recherches, M. LECORNEY est parvenu à donner à la terre cuite une teinte d'autant plus charmante qu'elle est naturelle, ayant le velouté de l'épiderme, la morbidesse de la chair en même temps que la solidité du silex.

Citons au hasard parmi ses œuvres personnelles : Péché Mignon, Petit Taquin, Troubadour, L'Enfant à la Montre, Le Premier Livre, Cendrillon, En avant-deux, Petit sou s'il vous plaît, Une Gamme.

Aide dans ses compositions par d'excellentes études artistiques, par une grande flexibilité de touche et par une merveilleuse habileté d'arrangements mise au service d'une imagination féconde et d'une grande facilité de production, il a pu, en quelques années, modeler de ses mains une importante collection, qui vaut une visite de chacun de nos lecteurs.

L'Enfant au Baiser.

Terre cuite de M. Lecorney.

MAISON FONDÉE EN 1839

J. LEON FILS, SUCC^R
TAPISSERIE ET DÉCORATION

9, rue Tronchet.

On disait autrefois Sainte-Mousseline. On dira bientôt Sainte-Peluche. Tout ce tissu nouveau est devenu promptement à la mode. On ne veut plus que de la peluche, et, si on la laisse faire, elle aura bientôt relégué dans l'ombre la soie, le velours et le brocart.

Je ne m'en étonne pas quand je vois l'habile parti que M. Léon sait en tirer. C'est un véritable temple qu'il lui a élevé dans le grand hall de l'Union centrale. Jamais nulle part elle ne s'était prisée à autant de combinaisons diverses et d'applications variées, jamais elle nous avait paru plus miroitante et plus chatoyante dans ses tonalités fines, dans ses reflets vigoureux, et dans ses nuances changeantes.

On m'assure que l'exposition de M. Léon a les préférences de toutes les belles visiteuses.

Je ne m'en étonne point, car elles trouvent chez lui toutes les choses chères à leur délicatesse et à leur élégance. Il faut les voir se promener au milieu de ces merveilles, allant d'un meuble à l'autre, admirant ce fauteuil, garni de son coussin, dont la forme générale rappelle l'époque de Louis XV, sur le fond bleu se détachent des lampas éclatants et des brocarts lamés d'or. La rampe est capitonnée et damassée de blanc, la corde est en peluche, d'un ton cuivre, et la passementerie plus riche encore.

Tout à côté, en vois un autre plus magnifique, s'il se peut. Son fond est d'un ton rose passé très doux, sa rampe en velours de Genes argenté, sa corde en peluche olive, et sa passementerie pleine d'agrément et de variété. En voici un troisième, qui s'est inspiré des plus gracieuses fantaisies de M^{me} de Pompadour, il est en satin blanc brodé, avec tresse en peluche bleue et de draperies retombantes, en peluche rose tendre, une cresse pour l'œil.

Peut-être trouverons-nous plus de style encore dans le canapé si bien composé par M. Léon, le dessus est un mélange d'anciennes broderies et de vieux lampas, sur étoffe cannetillée, fond cuivre. Le dessin général est Louis XIII, avec rampe capitonée en satin vieil or et corde en peluche vieux cuivre, la draperie est en peluche avec passementerie assortie.

Les mains ingénieuses et prodigieuses de M. Léon nous ont aussi donné quelques délicieux petits meubles : un bonheur du jour, genre Pompadour, avec coffre et tiroir, le tout garni de soie et de peluche et drapé à ravir. Une colonne, dont l'armature est toute revêtue de peluche, avec broderie et peinture, nous dit le dernier mot du luxe coquet et raffiné.

M. Léon nous montre aussi deux tentes d'un très grand et très beau style. L'une est à riches draperies, avec galerie formant voussure, en peluche cuivre, et lampas à fond vert et argent, le relevé est élégant et nouveau, laissant voir un joli store en soie.

La seconde forme tente : elle est en étoffe armure, fond vieux rouge et métal, se relevant sur des haliebardes. On se croirait dans le cabinet d'Henri II.

SERRURERIE D'ART

EXPOSITION DE M GAMBETTE AINE

4, rue Rameau, 4

CHACUN VISITEUR s'y arrête, son regard est attiré par le poli étincelant des nombreux objets en fer forgé qu'expose cette maison justement réputée. Ses modèles sont presque tous d'un travail remarquable, inspirés qu'ils sont par les vieux maîtres du grand art de la ferronnerie. En effet, après de patientes recherches M. GAMBETTE est parvenu à s'entourer de documents précieux et à s'identifier les pratiques des Jean l'Amour, des^e Quentin Matsys et des Machenotte, qu'il combine avec les moyens dont dispose l'industrie moderne. C'est sous ses yeux et dans ses ateliers de la rue de Richelieu que s'exécutent tous les travaux qu'admirent ici les amateurs du beau. Là, on peut voir la matière première se tordre et prendre les formes les plus variées sous la main d'habiles ouvriers.

Ses motifs ornementaux, ses chenets, ses landiers, ses suspensions de salle à manger, ses cadres de glaces, ses appliques de lumière, ses lustres, ses flambeaux, ses lanternes, ses horloges, ses pendules, ses armes et ses armures reproduisent exactement les plus beaux spécimens des siècles passés. L'amateur trouvera inévitablement dans les magasins de la maison GAMBETTE, tout en restant dans des prix modestes, de quoi satisfaire tous ses desirs.

BRODERIES ARTISTIQUES POUR AIDELEMENT

M^{LL} EMMA FOULON

45, rue Richer, 45

À DROITE, dans le grand hall de l'exposition de l'Union centrale au milieu du groupe si intéressant des tissus se trouve une petite vitrine, de modeste apparence, et près de laquelle on peut passer sans la remarquer. Mais, quand une fois on l'a vue, on veut la revoir elle vous retient et vous captive.

Cette vitrine est celle de M^{lle} Foulon, qu'il faut placer au premier rang parmi les habiles brodeuses de notre époque, elle a choisi dans ses ateliers de la rue Richer n° 45, quelques beaux spécimens de ses travaux, pour les exposer au Palais de l'Industrie où ils font l'admiration des véritables connaisseurs. Ses compositions originales et pleines de style, dans lesquelles tout est calculé pour arriver à un grand effet rustique sont encore rehaussées par des colorations exquises.

Tous les dessins des broderies modernes, que renferme la vitrine de M^{lle} Foulon, sont dus à un peintre de grand talent, M. Emile Le Cygne, qui a longtemps travaillé sous l'œil protecteur et paternel d'Arj Scheffer, et dont M^{lle} Foulon a su acquérir la très précieuse collaboration. C'est à lui qu'elle doit la largeur et l'originalité d'un dessin qui vise toujours à la grande décoration — et qui sait l'atteindre.

Dans toutes ces questions où il s'agit de l'Art appliqué à l'Industrie, si la première condition est de faire grand et beau, ce n'est pas la seule. Il faut encore trouver le moyen d'être accessible à une clientèle plus large que celle qui se composerait exclusivement de millionnaires. C'est là le grand desideratum de tout producteur qui veut arriver à une diffusion de ses œuvres suffisamment rémunératrice. Ce but, M^{lle} Foulon a su l'atteindre sans tâtonnements, et dès son premier effort.

FAIENCES, PORCELAINES ET CRISTAUX

GRAND DÉPÔT

11

EMILE BOURGEOIS

-1, rue Drouot, 21

La grande maison de dépôt de la rue Drouot ne se contente pas de soutenir vaillamment sa réputation, sa devise est « Toujours en avant ». Non seulement toutes les importantes manufactures de Céramique telles que Minton, Wedgwood, Copeland, Choisy le Roi, Creil et Montereau, Gien, Limoges, etc., y sont représentées, mais les plus petites fabriques de France et de l'étranger y envoient leurs modèles les plus réussis.

A côté de services de table, de tête à tête et d'objets divers d'un prix absolument incroyable, se trouvent aussi des pièces artistiques de nature à satisfaire le connaisseur le plus difficile. Parmi les objets appartenant à cette catégorie, je citerai un genre de céramique absolument nouveau qui va détrôner la Barbotine aux violentes colorations, ce sont de magnifiques vases décoratifs, cache-pots, etc., d'un orientalisme persan mélange de Renaissance. Sur des fonds bistres ou dorés, se détachent en relief des ornements décorés en couleurs, des bandes semées d'or, des fruits et des feuillages peints en relief donnant des effets de pâtes rapportées, tandis que des parties gravées en creux viennent compléter heureusement l'ornementation générale. A cette tentative nouvelle, nous prédisons le plus grand succès.

THE THIRD

ANNUAL

EXHIBITION OF TAPESTRY PAINTINGS BY LADY AMATEURS AND ARTISTS

PATRON

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCESS MARY ADELAIDE WILL BE HELD DURING DECEMBER JANUARY & FEBRUARY, IN
MESSRS. HOWELL & JAMES' ART GALLERIES
5, 7, 9, Regent Street, Pall Mall, London

MESSRS HOWELL & JAMES' ART CLASSES FOR LADIES

TAPESTRY PAINTING, CHINA PAINTING
BARBOTINE POTTERY PAINTING, OIL AND WATER COLOURS

HELD DAILY UNDER COMPETENT TEACHERS

IN THE STUDIOS AT THEIR ART GALLERIES

TERMS POST FREE ON APPLICATION

THE EIGHTH

ANNUAL

EXHIBITION OF PAINTINGS ON CHINA BY LADY AMATEURS AND ARTISTS

PATRONS

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES
H. I. & R. H. THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY

WILL BE HELD DURING MAY, JUNE, JULY IN

Messrs HOWELL & JAMES' ART GALLERIES

5, 7, 9, Regent Street, Pall Mall, London

JOUVET & C^{ie}, Éditeurs

5, Rue Palatine, PARIS.

BEAUX-ARTS PLASTIQUES

Encyclopédie historique archéologique biographique chronologique et monographique des Beaux-Arts plastiques, par Auguste Demain. Cette importante publication illustrée de plus de 6,000 gravures, complétée par une table alphabétique de plus de 20,000 mots, forme 3 volumes grand in-8 raisin cartonnés en toile, tranches charbonnées. 50 fr

LES MERVEILLES DE LA SCIENCE

Ou Description populaire des inventions modernes par Louis Figuier. 4 forts volumes grand in-8 Jésus illustrés de 1817 gravures. Ouvrage complet, broché. 40 fr

LES MERVEILLES DE L'INDUSTRIE

Ou Description populaire des procédés industriels depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu'à nos jours, par Louis Figuier. 4 volumes grand in-8 Jésus, illustrés de 1380 gravures. 40 fr

HISTOIRE DES CROISADES

Par Michaud, illustrée de 100 grandes compositions par Gustave Doré. Deux beaux volumes in-folio, papier superfin, reliés en toile rouge avec plaques ajourées en or et or, tranches charbonnées. 170 fr

HISTOIRE DE FRANCE POPULAIRE

Depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu'à nos jours, par Fauriol Martin. L'ouvrage complet, illustré de plus de 1,600 gravures, sera publié en 7 volumes grand in-8 Jésus. Les tomes I à VI sont en vente. Chaque volume, broché 8 fr cartonné 11 fr 1/2, 12 fr ou 13 fr

ATLAS UNIVERSEL DE GÉOGRAPHIE MODERNE

Physique politique historique industrielle commerciale et militaire, dressé par MM Bureau Rue et Gerdorp professeurs de géographie à l'école spéciale militaire de Saint-Germain, revu pour toutes les cartes générales par M. Maspero, professeur au Collège de France, et composé de 40 magnifiques cartes imprimées en plusieurs couleurs. Prix de l'atlas cartonné. 40 fr

LES FÊTES CHRÉTIENNES

Par l'abbé Brioux docteur en théologie. Un fort volume grand in-8 colombier illustré de 4 chromolithographies de 31 gravures sur acier, tirées en lavis de 40 compositions sur bois, l'ors texte imprimé en couleur et de nombreuses vignettes. 30 fr

Relié en demi-chagrin, tranches dorées avec plaques spéciales en or ou en demi-reliure d' amateur dorée en toile avec cordons. 40 fr

LES VIERGES DE RAPHAËL

COLLECTION de 12 magnifiques estampes gravées sur acier par Pellet-Dien Lévy Saint-Esprit, Metzinger, avec gravures d'un Laissé sur la vie et les ouvrages de Raphaël de nos explications sur chaque tableau par Peissier et du portrait de Raphaël gravé par Panier. La collection complète, imprimée sur papier de Chine et reliée avec soie en demi-chagrin rouge, tranches dorées. 140 fr

DOWDESWELL & DOWDESWELLS.

Publishers of and Dealers in Works of Art,
133, New Bond Street
(Two doors from the Grosvenor Gallery)
102, New Bond Street and 36, Chancery Lane, London

NOW ON VIEW

at 133, New Bond Street

BEAUTIES OF SURREY SCENERY

BEING A SERIES OF SKETCHES AND DRAWINGS IN WATER-COLOUR MADE THIS SUMMER BY Mr. SUTTON PALMER.

IN MARCH (1883) A

SERIES OF BEAUTIFUL DRAWINGS

SPECIALLY PAINTED FOR MESSRS DOWDESWELL BY

Mr. BIRKET FOSTER

OF THE

CATHEDRAL CITIES

OF

ENGLAND AND WALES

will be exhibited at the Gallery, 133, New Bond Street arrangements will probably be made to reproduce this beautiful series in pure line engraving.

HIGH CLASS MODERN PICTURES

DRAWINGS. ETCHINGS. &c. always on view.

C. MARPON & E. FLAMMARION, ÉDITEURS

Rue Racine, 26, et Galeries de l'Odéon

ENVOIS FRANCO CONTRE MANDAT

ŒUVRES DE J. MICHELET .

HISTOIRE DE FRANCE 19 beaux volumes n 18 à 3 fr 50 le vol (ci chaque volume se vend séparément)
HISTOIRE DE LA RÉVOLUTION 3 volumes in 18 à 3 fr 50 le volume.
HISTOIRE DU DIX NEUVIÈME SIÈCLE 3 volumes in 18 à 3 fr 50 le volume.
ABRÉGÉS D'HISTOIRE DE FRANCE Voyen âge 1 volume n 18 à 2 ec cartes 4 fr Temps modernes 1 fort volume in 18 à 2 ec cartes 4 fr P. cis de la Révolution française 1 fort volume in 18 à 2 ec cartes 4 fr (Carionnage à l'anglaise 50 c en sus)

COLLECTION DES GRANDS ÉCRIVAINS CONTEMPORAINS ÉTRANGERS

MONMAYEN HISTOIRE ROMAINE traduction de l'écrit 7 volumes n 18 à 3 fr 50
BUCKLE HISTOIRE DE LA CIVILISATION EN ANGLETERRE traduction de Rallot 3 volumes n 18 à 3 fr 50
MOTTLEY LA RÉVOLUTION DES PAYS BAS AU XVI SIÈCLE 6 volumes n 18 à 3 fr 50.

ŒUVRES DE CAMILLE FLAMMARION ASTRONOMIE POPULAIRE

Ouvrage couronné par l'Académie française

UN BEAU VOLUME GRAND IN 8° JÉSUS DE 840 PAGES

1 lustre de 360 gravures 7 chromolithographies cartes célestes etc 1 r x broché 12 fr relié 1

LES ÉTOILES ET LES CURIOSITÉS DU CIEL

Descriptio complète du ciel étoilé par étoile moyen de reconnaître les constellations 1 vol grand n 8° Jésus illustré de 400 gravures et de chromolithographies Pr x 10 f relié 1
Voyages aériens Journal de bord le douze voyages en ballon 1 volume in 18
La Pluralité des Mondes 1 ab les 28^e édition 1 volume à 12 avec figures
Les Mondes : agnars et les Mondes réels 1 édition 1 volume in 12 avec figures
Dieu dans la nature 1^{re} édition 1 volume in 12
Sir Humphry Davy Les derniers jours d'un Philosophe 1^{re} édition française. 1 vol. n 12.
Pec ts de l'infini Lumen — Histoire d'une âme. — Il s'agit d'une comète — La Voie lactée et l'éternité 1^{re} édition 1 volume n 12
Les Terres du Ciel 1 volume in 18 à 2 ec figures

BIBLIOTHÈQUE ILLUSTRÉE

E. CHAVETTE Les petites Comédies 1^{re} édition n 18. Gravures et eaux fortes de Benoit — Les petits Dramas de la vertu deux émaillés des Petites Comédies du vice 1 volume in 18 — Eau forte et dessins de J. Kauffmann

— Les Belles Histoires pour terminer les Petites Comédies du vice 1 volume n 18 — 1 illustration de Kauffmann

VAST RICOUARD Pour ces Dames Illustrations de Kauffmann avec frontispice à l'eau forte 1 volume in 18

ALFRED DELVAU Les Heures par ses heures Illustrées de vingt six eaux fortes et du portrait de l'auteur Un beau volume in 16 grand Jésus sur papier vergé

ERNEST D'HERVILLY Timbale d'Il s'agit de la Parisienne 1 volume in 18 Illustrations de Régamey

CHARLES LEROY Le colonel Ranollet 1 volume n 18 Nombreuses illustrations

ARNAND SILVESTRE Pour faire r r r 1 volume in 18 Illustrations de Kauffmann

ROMANS NOUVEAUX

E. CHAVETTE Révélez Sophie 2 volumes in 18

— La Bande de la belle Alibelle 1 volume

ALEXIS BOUVIER Le bel Alphonse 2 volumes n 18

P. DELCOURT Le Secret d'un Juif d'instruction 1 volume

ED. CADOL Son Excellence de Sat nette 1 volume

A. JULIA Le César 1 volume in 18

MARIE COLOMBIER Le Carnet d'une Par sienne 1 volume

FÉLIX NARJOUX Un Tour en Europe W Knobbs

RATTAZZI Les Mœurs de la Créole 2 volume in 18

P. ELZEAR Jack Tempête 1 volume in 18

ZOLA L'Assommoir Édition illustrée

Oriental Carpets

DIRECT FROM THE VARIOUS DISTRICTS OF MANUFACTURE IN TURKEY, PERSIA AND INDIA

IMPORTED BY

CARDINAL & HARFORD

Levant Warehouse

108 & 109, High Holborn London W. C.

Price Lists containing particulars of size forwarded on application.

M^{ON} CHARLES ROBERSON & C^{IE}

LONDRES - 99, Long Acre, 99 - LONDRES

Manufacture de couleurs fines

MEDIUM, TOILES, PANNEAUX, BLOCS, ETC.

et en général de tout le matériel pour

la Peinture à l'huile, l'Aquarelle et le Dessin

Papiers de Whatman, Creswick, Harding Cattermole et Cartridge

E. MARY et Fils, 26, rue Chaptal, PARIS

Seuls Représentants pour la France

AD 1313

DOLAND & SON

PICTURE FRAME MAKERS.

6. NEW COMPTON STREET.

SOHO. W.C. LONDON

Pictures removed by Read or Rail in improved Vase specially constructed for the safe conveyance of Works of Art

RAPHAEL TUCK AND SONS'

ROYAL ACADEMY SERIES

or

CHRISTMAS AND NEW-YEAR CARDS

The Original Designs for the ROYAL ACADEMY SERIES of CARDS have been specially furnished by Messrs Joynter, R.A. Stott R.A. Leslie, R.A. Horsley R.A. Yeaman, R.A., Hodgson, R.A. Dobson R.A. Herdman, R.S.A., Marcus Stone, R.A., &c

THE ROCK OF AGES SERIES

or

SCRIPTURE TEXT CARDS IN PACKETS

EASTER, CONDOLENCE, & BIRTHDAY CARDS.

VALENTINE, CONGRATULATORY

OF ALL BOOKSELLERS, STATIONERS

and FINEART DEALERS, THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

RAPHAEL TUCK & SONS,

72 & 73, Coleman-Street,

WEDDING, AND MENU CARDS.

THE REGISTERED TRADE MARK
"EASEL AND PALETTE" IS PRINTED ON THE BACK OF EACH CARD

FINE-ART PUBLISHERS, City, London

Manufacture de Papiers de Tenture

70-72, Faubourg du Temple, 70-72

PARIS

JOUANNY

Articles de Style

REPRODUCTIONS DE MOTIFS ANCIENS

Imitations de Tapis d'Orient

PRODUITS BRILLANTS NOUVEAUX

BREVETÉS S G D G FRANCE ET ÉTRANGER

MEDAILLE DE BRONZE

(3^e Groupe Papiers et Tissus)

Exposition des Arts Décoratifs, 1882

Manufacture de Papiers de Tenture

70-72, Faubourg du Temple, 70-72

PARIS

JOUANNY

INVENTEUR DES PAPIERS

DITS

Chromo-Tentures

BREVETÉS S. G. D. G. FRANCE ET ÉTRANGER

MÉDAILLE DE BRONZE

(4^e Groupe Outils et Métiers)

Exposition des Arts Décoratifs, 1882

NOUVELLE MACHINE ROTATIVE TYPOGRAPHIQUE

IMPRIMANT SANS INTERRUPTIONS

43, Rue TOURNEFORT (Panthéon)

PARIS

P. ARENTS

GRAVURE HÉLIOGRAPHIQUE

POUR

LA TAILLE DOUCE ET LA TYPOGRAPHIE

APPLICATIONS

POUR

LES SCIENCES LES ARTS

ET

L'INDUSTRIE

PLOMBERIE & CUIVRERIE D'ART

MAISON MONDRIET & BECHET

GAGET, GAUTHIER & C^{ie}, S

25, Rue de Chazelles, 25

PARIS

Londres 1902, Médaille de bronze
Paris 1867, Médaille d'argent et or Vienne 1873, Diplôme d'honneur
Paris 1878, Gr. Prix et Méd. d'Or

Principaux Travaux exécutés

Flèche de la Ste-Chapelle
N. D. de Paris
Faites des Tulleries et de Lavers
Dôme des Invalides
Cathédrales d'Amiens de Reims et autres
Palais de Justice
Château de Pierrefonds
Eglise de la Trinité
Réd. Scillon
de la colonne Vendôme
Statue de la République
Dômes de l'Opéra
Géant des Arts
Faites de l'Esplanade de la Statue colossale
de l'Indépendance Américaine
(haut 45 mètres)

Société anonyme d'Ameublement

Capital TROIS MILLIONS

ANCIENNE MAISON

ANCIENNE MAISON

FOYE-DAVENNE

MARNYHAC

AUX MÉRINOS

MARBRES BLANCS

OBJETS D'ART

AMEUBLEMENTS COMPLETS

TAPIS, LITERIE

Etoffes d'Ameublement

EXPOSITION UNIVERSELLE DE 1878

MEDAILLE D'OR

MAGASINS

ATELIERS

26, avenue de l'Opéra, 26

8, rue Sainte-Anne, 8

PARIS

Paris

26, rue Chaptal

E. MARY & FILS

Fournitures complètes

POUR

LA PEINTURE A L'HUILE, L'AQUARELLE LA SCULPTURE & LE DESSIN

TOILES DE TOUTES COULEURS POUR TABLEAUX la DÉCORATION et le MARQUAGE

MATÉRIELS D'ATELIER ET DE CAMPAGNE

FABRIQUE SPECIALE

de Blocs & d'Albums, de Mannequins

de Couleurs pour Tapisserie et de Chassis à vis double (breveté s. g. d. g.)

SUPPRIMANT LES CIEFS

DORURE ET ENCADREMENT

Dévernissage

Re toileage et Restauration de Tableaux

Articles Anglais

DE LA

M^{on} CH. ROBERSON & C^{ie}

DE LONDRES

PHOTOGRAVURE
A. MICHELET
76, Rue de Rennes, 76
PARIS

ILLUSTRATION DE LIVRES & DE JOURNAUX
CLICHÉS POUR CHROMOTYPOGRAPHIE
Avec division des Couleurs sur Papiers spéciaux

Reproduction de dessins à la plume
FUSAINS CRAYONS
TABLEAUX, AQUARELLES, PAYSAGES
D'APRÈS NATURE

VENTE DE PAPIERS
POUR LA PHOTOGRAPHIE

2 frs 1/2

Fac simile d'après un dessin à la plume

Cliche exécuté par M A Michelet

,6 rue de Rennes

UN LOTERIE UN

Franc LE BILLET

de
L'UNION CENTRALE DES ARTS DÉCORATIFS

Autorisée par Arrêté ministériel du 31 mai 1882

Pour la Création à Paris d'un Musée d'Art décoratif

DIX GROS LOTS

Un de 500.000 Francs

Un Lot de 200.000 fr.

Quatre Lots de 100.000 fr.

Quatre Lots de 50.000 fr.

Sept Lots de 25 000 francs

Vingt Lots de 10 000 francs

Cent Lots de 1 000 francs

Quatre-vingts Lots de 500 francs

ENSEMBLE 338 LOTS FORMANT DEUX MILLIONS

payables en espèces

LE MONTANT DES LOTS EST DÉPOSÉ À LA BANQUE DE FRANCE

Commission d'administration de l'Union centrale des Arts décoratifs

Président d'honneur M. Edouard Loubé * — Prés. d'hon. du Conseil M. Antoine Prost dép. — Sec. et 1^{er} vice-prés. M. Henri Bouchet * — 1^{er} vice-prés. MM. le comte de Gaby — A. Loubet de Laforest * — Paul Christol * — Trésorier Léon Grados — Secrétaire MM. de Champéaux — Lefebvre *

Commission de surveillance de la Loterie

MM. Antoine Prost député G. Berger * C. — Henri Bouchet O * — Eugène Bertin *
G. Dreyfus * — Léon Grados — Belamotte bidet. — Sec. et 1^{er} M. le Comte D'arcier de la Loterie M. Henri Avenel

Pont part à de droit de la Commission de surveillance et un comité d'aux de la Préfecture de la Seine et un délégué de la Préfecture de la Seine

La tête de la Commission de la Loterie est au Palais de l'Industrie
Porte N. 11 étage supérieur — Paris

Les Billets sont délivrés contre Espèces Chèques ou Mandats

à l'ordre de M. Henri Avenel, directeur de la Loterie

